Building Bigger Circles and Tighter Connections

La Salle Strengthens Alumni Bonds

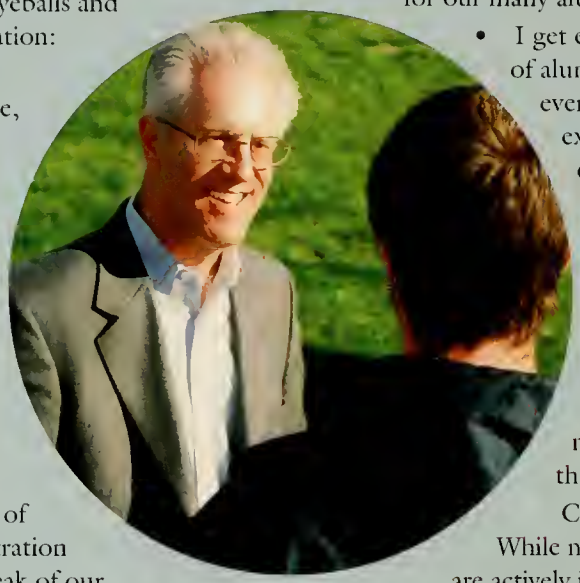
All are Invited Back to La Salle

Michael J. Diccicco, '71, President of the La Salle University Alumni Association

MAYBE IT'S ONE OF THOSE CHICKEN OR EGG IDEAS: Do great universities spawn active, enthusiastic, caring, and giving alumni?

Or is it the alumni who play an essential role in making their universities great?

If I asked either of my adult kids those questions, there's a chance I'd get the rolled eyeballs and the anthem response of their generation: "Whatever, Dad."



Pay attention, offspring: For once, I agree with you. It doesn't matter which came first. The point is that, in today's world especially, great universities and engaged alumni are inextricably connected—and you never seem to have one without the other.

La Salle University President Brother Michael McGinniss believes this passionately. Developing a stronger and more involved alumni body has been one of the continuing goals of his administration from day one. And, in the street speak of our times, he has put La Salle money where his mouth is, significantly increasing the funding and support for all Alumni Relations activities.

More than that, Br. Mike has sounded this theme of alumni involvement loudly and often—in person at Alumni Association board meetings, at academic convocations, at athletic events, at Reunion and Homecoming. Unfailingly, he makes sure that his audience knows this is not a simple request for donations, though he typically smiles and acknowledges, "We need those, too." Br. Mike's remarks are focused on alumni engagement. No subtlety here: He sees La Salle alumni as an integral component of La Salle University.

As President of your Alumni Association, I often ask myself the obvious question: Are we responding to his call?

I think so. In my two-year term, I've had the chance to see—firsthand—significant growth in the richness and diversity of alumni involvements:

- It is not unusual to encounter alums on campus late into the evenings (on "school" nights, no less), heading to or coming from committee and advisory board meetings for our many alumni volunteer organizations.
- I get enthused seeing a greater number of alumni attending all kinds of La Salle events and activities—and I'm doubly excited when I hear some version of the phrase, "It's been years—I'm glad I came back."
- We now have active alumni clubs in more than 15 cities and counties around the country. And, just this past fall, when we reached out to alumni to support La Salle student recruiting efforts, we got nearly 100 volunteers involved with the Alumni Admission Network.

Candidly, though, we need more. While many of our more than 40,000 alumni are actively involved with La Salle, this University, the Christian Brothers who taught us, and (you'll hear more of this) the Lasallian mission need more of us willing to get engaged.

To that end, your Alumni Association has worked for the last two years under a simple theme: Bigger Circles, Tighter Connections. The thought is based on a graphic view of all alumni as a series of concentric circles, each one representing a different level of "connectedness" to the center of the circle, La Salle. And it is your Alumni Association's hope that we will continue to draw more and more of us toward that center, constantly enlarging the circle of "closely connected" and continually strengthening our bonds with the University.

Think about it, please. Your role within La Salle University need not have ended with graduation.

We are looking for more than a few good Explorers—and we're looking for you now.

Building Bigger Circles and Tighter Connections

La Salle Strengthens Alumni Bonds

La Salle's alumni have traveled a long way since their college days. Not only can they be found in every state in the U.S. and in several countries, but they have also journeyed far and wide in terms of personal and professional accomplishments. One of the main goals of the University and the Alumni Association is to encourage alumni to bring their talents, energy, and experiences back to the La Salle community. From mentoring students to helping plan events to mapping out a course for the University's future, there are dozens of opportunities for alumni to contribute. In this section, learn about the growth of alumni programs, explore ways to be a part of life at La Salle, meet the new Alumni Association officers, and get to know a few alums who continue to make La Salle the vibrant educational community that it is.

BY THOMAS W. DURSO

THE WEATHER ON THE WEST COAST WAS LOUSY THAT NIGHT.

As the La Salle graduate peered out his window, he wondered if the University alumni event he was to attend would still be held. It was too late for him to call and check on its status, so he hunkered down in front of his computer, logged on to his mylasalle account, and, with just a few clicks, discovered that the gathering was still a go, bad weather and all. And so he headed out into the foreboding evening, reconnected with fellow alumni, and had himself a grand time catching up and reminiscing about his time at 20th and Olney.

That someone would take advantage of online resources to confirm scheduling is hardly a startling revelation. But for La Salle, the story is a small but telling reflection of what the University has done to upgrade its relations with alumni—not only what it communicates to its graduates but also how, and where.

At the same time, the school's Alumni Association has undergone seminal strategic changes of its own, professionalizing its operations and supplementing its history and legacy with an infusion of fresh faces and diverse ideas.

The aims are many: To reconnect alumni with their alma mater and with one another. To become a value-added resource for alumni and students. To enrich the La Salle University name and reputation with an awareness of the common traits that link all alums, regardless of when they graduated or where they settled. And to solicit and receive much-needed support for a dynamic, evolving school that many of its graduates who have drifted away would be surprised at and impressed with.

Dominic Grosso, '73, M.B.A. '81

At work: Grosso has been Vice President and Chief Information Officer for AAA Mid-Atlantic since 1996, overseeing communication systems and technologies for 3.4 million members throughout 76 AAA locations in five states and Washington, D.C.

At La Salle: Grosso is Chair of the University's Computer Science Advisory Board.

Why have you chosen to remain involved at La Salle?

I fell in love with La Salle for a lot of different reasons. The professors took a very caring approach with students—they weren't interested in numbers, they were interested in the wellbeing of every student. That philosophy has helped me since my first management position because, at La Salle, I learned that good leadership and individual attention are major ingredients for success in accomplishing goals.

How has this involvement benefited you?

I have met a lot of great people who have broadened my point of view and helped me to stay sharp in the work that I do. The students of today are the employees of tomorrow, so my involvement with the advisory board and interactions with students have helped me to be alert to the skills and qualities that the next generation of workers will bring to the workplace. Plus, it gives me a good feeling to do something good for La Salle.

How do you think La Salle benefits from the involvement of its alumni?

The more alumni are tuned into what is happening on campus, the more they will pass the word about the quality of the education and enhance the University's reputation. Our Computer Science Advisory Board's IT panel events will assist alumni who work in computer science or information technology fields in driving La Salle's reputation at their companies around the region, which benefits students and can contribute to the growth of La Salle's programs.

"The more we can draw people in, the more they're going to go out and spread the word," said James Ahern, '70, incoming President of the Alumni Association. "It becomes a viral-type thing. One tells two, and two tell four, and four tell eight."

FOCUS ON ALUMNI

Few things frustrate university administrators more than hearing their institution called a well-kept secret, especially when there are things worth sharing.

Faculty scholarship, capital improvements, student achievements, service immersions—thriving universities feature all of these and much more. But unless their various publics—current and prospective students and parents, alumni, the media, funding organizations—know about such activities, it becomes much more

The Four-C's of Alumni Relations: Classes, Clubs, Careers, and Communication

BY LEEN KHALIFA, '00

AMONG MORE THAN 40,000 LA SALLE alumni, the fellowship of other alumni can be powerful and beneficial to all, both personally and professionally. The Office of Alumni Relations and the Alumni Association foster opportunities for alumni to connect with one another and the University by offering programs and services of interest to alumni.

The needs and interests of alumni are met through four general areas: classes, clubs, careers, and communication. These four areas are the channels for alumni to commune through social, service, and professional activities, all in the name of La Salle University. The 4 C's also help La Salle communicate the importance of its volunteer alumni by identifying and developing future alumni leaders.

Classes

One of the most common ways in which alumni identify with each other is through their graduating class. Since the beginning of La Salle's Alumni Relations Program in the 1950s, La Salle has hosted class Reunions. Fifty years later, Reunions are still the cornerstone of the Alumni Relations Program.

In more recent years, class programming has evolved to include Reunions with clusters of classes or affinities. Some class committees invite the classes that graduated before and after them to their Reunions. Other class committees organize mini Reunions at La Salle's Homecoming. Also, alumni who were involved in sororities, fraternities, sports, and academic programs as students organize their gatherings during traditional Reunion celebrations.

Clubs

La Salle is committed to investing in a national network of clubs and chapters to create local opportunities for alumni to connect with one another and with La Salle. Most recently, the program has worked to develop a network of clubs closer to campus, such as the Bucks County Alumni Club. Half of all La Salle alumni live in Pennsylvania, and more than half of Pennsylvania alumni live in and around Philadelphia. Therefore, reaching out to alumni within driving distance of La Salle serves to connect alumni with each other in their communities, while enhancing La Salle's presence in local communities.

In conjunction with the Clubs and Chapters Program, alumni volunteers have partnered with La Salle's Office of Admission to assist in recruiting new students. Through the Alumni Admission Network, alumni volunteers discuss their own La Salle experiences difficult for the school to continue them. Recruiting, fund-raising, and external validation are among the very important factors deeply affected by public perception. For a Catholic university to continue its good and vital work, work that educates today's and tomorrow's leaders and that instills necessary values during often-turbulent times, a certain amount of recognition is vital.

While the Christian Brothers are overcoming a long-standing reticence when it comes to self-promotion, the University's alumni are becoming more vocal, as well. According to Michael Diccicco, '71, President of the Alumni Association, this is a welcome development, as a strong and active alumni base can convince prospective students of the lifelong benefits of a La Salle education.

"If they see a vibrant and connected and involved alumni, it adds significantly to the positives of the school, not just on a four-year basis but beyond that," he said. "If someone can say, 'I go to the school and can look forward not just to four great years, but I'll be connected to very vibrant people,' it's a great plus."

La Salle's alumni community has always had its share of passionate voices, but it wasn't until the presidency of Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., with prospective students and their families. The network helps to ensure the next generation of Explorers by allowing prospective students to explore what is great about La Salle through face-to-face contact with alumni.

Careers

Networking is the key to a strong, successful career. Getting involved in your local alumni club is great way to make networking contacts. In addition to class and club events, one of the ways the Career and Professional Networking Program aims to serve the career-related needs of alumni is through events for those with similar professional interests. This spring, an alumni entrepreneur panel discussion provided attendees the opportunity to connect, meet, and learn from the panelists, who were successful alumni entrepreneurs with diverse working experiences.

In conjunction with networking events, there are a variety of online tools to facilitate networking opportunities. The mylasalle Alumni Portal provides searchable databases to seek career guidance or find alumni working in a specific industry. It also provides on-demand services, such as posting jobs or signing up to be a career mentor, so that alumni and students can find you. CareerPath, the new service available in the mylasalle portal, is a career management portfolio that allows the user to present a graphic, electronic view of career experiences, education, and professional achievements. Networking events and the mylasalle portal provide opportunities to get to know La Salle alumni working in a variety of professions and establish contacts that could lead to future customers and networking opportunities.

Communication

To benefit from all the programs, services, and events that La Salle has to offer, alumni need to keep their contact information updated with La Salle. The easiest way to update information is to call the Office of Alumni Relations at 215.951.1535 or visit the Alumni Web site and locate the "Update Your Info" link under the "Resources" menu. Doing this ensures that your contact information is secure and centralized for access only by La Salle's faculty, staff, and Christian Brothers. Keeping contact information up to date ensures that alumni will continue to receive this magazine, alumni and school newsletters, e-mails, and current information about La Salle.

In addition, many alumni stay informed by checking the Alumni Web site regularly to learn about upcoming events, read about alumni in the news, view the variety of available alumni benefits, and learn more about alumni volunteering. Complementary to the Alumni Web site, the mylasalle Alumni Portal is the new way to cultivate relationships and keep the fellowship of alumni strong and mutually beneficial for La Salle and its alumni.

Ph.D., '70, that both the University and the Alumni Association decided to revamp alumni programming and outreach to diversify, energize, and increase participation. According to James Gulick, '89, Assistant Vice President for Alumni Relations, among the strategic priorities Br. Michael articulated from the start of his tenure in 1999 were communication of La Salle's distinct identity and a focus on alumni.

"Br. Michael made a strategic decision to provide a more integrated message to our alumni and to look for more opportunities to do so," Gulick said. "I believe that we have overcome the culture of modesty by not relying on one person—or, in this case, the Christian Brothers as a group—to deliver that message. We have invested in many vehicles and people—faculty, staff, and alumni included—that enable us to articulate our message, especially among our alumni."

For his part as University President, Br. Michael says, "I remain convinced that a university cannot reach its true potential without the active engagement and support of its alumni."

A NEW APPROACH

Gulick returned to his alma mater soon after Br. Michael came on board and, emboldened by the new president's mandate, initiated what he calls the Four C's of Programming: Communications, Class, Clubs and Chapters, and Career Networking (see related story, this page). The idea was to develop

Eileen Matthews, '81

At work: Matthews is a television executive producer. She is the co-owner of Segue Productions Inc. and the Executive Director of the Mid-Atlantic National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences Organization, the chapter that gives out local EMMY Awards.

At La Salle: Matthews is a member of the Communication Department Advisory Board.

Why have you chosen to remain involved at La Salle?

My experience and education at La Salle has provided me with the foundation and skills to excel in my profession as a television producer. As a successful alumna, I am proud and honored to be able to mentor students and work with the Communication Department faculty.

How has this involvement benefited you?

I am proud to say that there have been several La Salle students who are now working in the television industry because of my mentoring. Who knows? Maybe they will be my boss someday. Kidding aside, giving back is the Lasallian way, and that's why I come back year after year.

How do you think La Salle benefits from the involvement of its alumni?

I think the true success of a university is determined by the continued involvement of its alumni. La Salle in my opinion excels in maintaining relationships with its former students. I don't have too many colleagues who can say that they still have a friendship with faculty members, 20 years after graduating.

broad-based opportunities to meet alumni where they are in terms of geography, profession, and social interests, and via mail, electronically, or in person. And the University plowed considerably more funds into alumni programs.

Among the changes were a refocus on the alumni magazine to a more comprehensive view of the University; the creation of new alumni and school-specific newsletters; and significant investment in online resources, including an alumni Web site and the pioneering Web portal, called mylasalle. Clubs and chapters were expanded, and more alumni events were scheduled so that the University could reach out to graduates more often. Comprehensive research resulted in the development of a clearly articulated marketing message and key themes, and staffing in University Advancement was increased so that those points could be communicated to alumni more often and more clearly.

"The educational environment we're in is the most competitive environment there is. We need to get this right," said William Matthews, '90, who was president of the Alumni Association from 2003 to 2005. "Br. Michael said, 'You need to be an out-front, respected group, a real reflection of what the University is all about.' He's empowered us in a very significant way."

At the same time, the Alumni Association was making changes of its own. After experiencing difficulty running its affairs under the leadership of a board whose membership topped 75, the Association reduced that number to 25, worked hard to increase its budget, and tossed the previous practice of appointing its leadership in favor of holding competitive elections.

"The result was a more diverse leadership group," Matthews said. "The University is now a much more regional and much more diverse school than it once was, and it actively recruits students from New England to Northern Virginia, so we needed an Alumni Board that very much approximated that group."

"I remain convinced that a university cannot reach its true potential without the active engagement and support of its alumni."
—Br. Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70

"The school is broadening its footprint from where it wants to get students," Ahern agreed, "and alumni can help with that effort. The one thing we all realize is how valued we've been made to feel by Br. Michael and the administration."

CONTINUING RELATIONSHIPS

Overlaying these alumni-related changes was a University evolution that saw the introduction of new academic programs; the near completion of a major gift initiative to fund a new science and technology building and increase the University's endowment; the construction of a new residence hall, St. Basil Court, and dining facility, Treetops Café, on South Campus; the expansion of the Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa.; and the plans to build a retail center on the Good Shepherd property. Driving much of the University's revamped relations with its alumni was a desire to inform and involve them in the changing University—and, equally important, how it has remained the same, in terms of mission and identity, in the face of the changes.

"The involvement between the Association and the school is 100 percent greater than it was when I was there, and even when I was President," said Joseph Cloran, '61, who led the Alumni Association from 1995 to 1997. "It's taken a tremendous step forward."

Among the beneficial effects of the University's desire to diversify engagement among alumni has been an increase in the involvement of younger graduates as well as those who have moved away from Philadelphia.

Meg Kane, '03, was an early volunteer, as she was named as a sophomore to the inaugural group of La Salle University Ambassadors, who serve as liaisons between the University's student body and alumni. She quickly learned her way around Advancement and Alumni Relations, and so it wasn't surprising when Gulick called her the year after she graduated to ask her to accept a nomination to run for the Alumni Association's Board of Directors. Kane agreed, won a seat, and serves as chair of the Association's Young Alumni and Class Programs Committee, which is attempting to broaden La Salle's volunteer alumni base beyond the usual pool of reliable graduates who have always been tapped. This summer she will assume the position of Association Secretary.

"It's an area I feel passionate about," Kane said. "You have to keep your alumni involved and active and part of the University community from the day they graduate. Get people involved early and often."

Joanna McClinton, '03

At work: McClinton graduated from the Villanova University School of Law in 2006 and works as an assistant defender at the Defender Association of Philadelphia.

At La Salle: A member of the African American Alumni Association, McClinton participated on the Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Awards Dinner Planning Committee and will chair the Mentoring Committee this fall. Most recently, she was elected to the Alumni Association Board of Directors, where she participates on the Nominations, Community Service, and Young Alumni committees.

Why have you chosen to remain involved at La Salle?

As a student at La Salle, I underwent an amazing metamorphosis. In the fall of 1999, I entered the University as a shy 17-year-old, yet in the spring of 2003 I graduated as an emerging leader. Looking back on my experience encourages me to stay involved to promote and advance the University and the La Salle community.

How has this involvement benefited you?

This involvement gives me the opportunity to stay connected to the La Salle community. Meeting current students enables me to be a mentor and make myself available to them. Additionally, my involvement also allows me to interact with resourceful alumni, who in turn often mentor me.

How do you think La Salle benefits from the involvement of its alumni?

The entire La Salle community benefits from alumni involvement. Students are inspired by the outstanding accomplishments of La Salle grads, while alumni are impressed with the University's continued advancement through its promising students.

Stephanie Derrig didn't have to be convinced. After graduating in 1990, she returned often to campus for events and helped to plan her class's five- and 10-year reunions. But when the Center City insurance company she was working for went under, Derrig left Philadelphia for Florida, where she fell out of touch with La Salle. After a while, she moved to northern New Jersey and did some networking with La Salle alumni in New York before deciding to formalize her reinvolvement as an alumna. As a leader in the University's newly formed North Jersey club, Derrig works with the Alumni Relations office to develop and institute programming for fellow alums there.

"Like any relationship, you have your times when you really can give back, and there are times when you can't find time," she said. "It doesn't have to be a lot—that's how I got back in. (Involvement) sort of completes you. You latch onto something and you say, 'Wow, that's a part of my history, and here's who I am now.' It rounds out your place in the world. It's very fulfilling."

Derrig cites altruism as her motivation for volunteering.

"There's a certain amount of responsibility to continue the good name," she said. "It's like your family—no matter what you think about them, you don't talk bad about them. La Salle is my family. It's my responsibility to help and share the good news about the University."

Alyson Stone, '98, who heads the New York club, points out that alumni outside of Philadelphia are often surprised by the number of fellow La Salle grads who live and work where they do.

"They sometimes feel like there aren't a whole lot of them, that there are only a handful here and there," Stone said. "In Manhattan alone there's a sizable amount, around 100."

Like Derrig, Stone said it's not necessary for every alumnus "to take up a massive role in trying to further the mission of the school. Just showing up to events and getting to know people does help the school. It creates more and more of a culture that continues after college.

"The better we do as an alumni organization, the better off the school and the better for every individual," Stone added. "The more the school is known as a place shepherding and guiding students into the professional world, the better we'll all be known in our own careers."

MaryAnn Simpson, '82

At work: Simpson is the school nurse at Fulton Elementary School in the Germantown section of Philadelphia.

At La Salle: A member of the School of Nursing's first graduating class, Simpson has served on the School of Nursing and Health Sciences' Advisory Board, and she has welcomed La Salle nursing students to Fulton Elementary School to interact with young students and see how theoretical and scientific nursing principles are put into practice.

Why have you chosen to remain involved at La Salle?

I am committed to the education of future nurses. I believe in the education that these new nursing students are receiving. And also believe that having contact with nursing students keeps me current in practice and theory.

How has this involvement benefited you?

Nursing is a life-long professional commitment. My association with the La Salle Nursing Program has made me a better nurse by allowing me to mentor future nurses. To show them that each and every patient they interact with presents new challenges and opportunities to teach and change another's life.

How do you think La Salle benefits from the involvement of its alumni?

Your alumni are your ticket to the future. Good alumni will sell your educational programs by living your philosophy. St. John Baptist de La Salle was a great teacher. Nursing provides the individual every opportunity to live out his teaching every day with every patient.

SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE

It was a La Salle connection that launched Jeff Boyle, '88, on the road to a partnership at Pricewaterhouse-Coopers (PWC). He was recruited to the company by University alumnus Tom Leonard, '70, currently the Alumni Association's Treasurer, and he has repaid that mentorship by serving as PWC's recruiting point person at La Salle. In addition to his work on several committees and advisory boards and his presence at University events, Boyle returns to campus twice a year just to recruit for internships and full-time entry-level slots, and he has created an ad hoc committee to engage the 75 La Salle alumni who work at PWC's Center City Philadelphia office. He speaks convincingly of his "passion for La Salle and its mission of educating first- or second-generation college students."

"It's important that the students recognize that the only reason they can go here and afford it is because of successful alumni who give back," said Boyle, who serves on the School of Business and Communication Department advisory boards. "Students may think it's expensive to go here—well, imagine if alumni weren't involved to offer financial support."

Alumni involvement is also a terrific networking tool, noted James Debuque, M.B.A. '99. Born and raised in Bucks County, he took many of his graduate classes at the University's Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa., and raves about the "absolutely terrific experience" he had with the program.

"I initially became involved with the professional networking group for the whole school," Debuque said. "As I talked with some of the leaders within the professional network, I learned they were trying to connect with some of the Bucks County alumni. They had had a Bucks chapter before, but wanted to get it reenergized, so I volunteered. There's a lot of potential there. The thing that sets La Salle apart is that when I mentioned I would get involved, it was open arms. As far as commitment, they said any involvement you can give us. They really nurtured that."

Indeed, recognizing that interest among alumni will not be uniform, the University and Alumni Association have committed to providing a variety of activities and welcoming anyone who raises a hand.

"There is something for everyone," Matthews said. "We have come up with programming and tools of communication for everyone, regardless of whether they want to attend one event a year or be kept up to date with their alma mater or be involved on a serious level. There are ways to keep up at whatever level."

EXPANDING OPPORTUNITIES

For all of the changes in how the University and its alumni relate to each other, there is still work to be done.

"I still run into more alumni than I should who will quickly tell you they haven't been on campus since the day they graduated, and they don't have an active connection with the school," lamented James McManus, '69, president of the athletics booster organization, the Explorer Club.

Diccicco estimates that approximately 10,000 of La Salle's more than 40,000 alumni are what he terms "closely connected" or "loosely connected." The remaining alumni population can be identified as "disconnected" alums and will be the targets of concerted efforts going forward. The University is constructing a network of opportunities for tighter connections among more alumni.

This expanding network of association and involvement is characterized by linked channels of information and communication, increased volunteer opportunities, an effective structure for leadership development, and more informed volunteers.

"It is a question of critical mass," Diccicco said. "Competing today in the academic world is a fearsome challenge for any school or university. The need to have everything you can possibly bring in terms of features and benefits for prospective students is an important plus. Really connected and engaged alumni do a lot of things besides write checks. They add importantly to the spirit of a school, and they add importantly to the substance of a school in terms of being involved as guest lecturers and as mentors."

Ahern, Diccicco's successor, envisions exploring whether to enlarge the Association board "if we want to do all we want to do." As Association President, he hopes to continue the emphasis on clubs and chapters, increase outreach to alumni, and build even tighter relationships with the University and its administration.

"We can do wonderful things," he said. "I'm extremely excited about this opportunity."

The future will see the continued development of a national class alumni relations program, and a continued increase in the number of alumni who will be engaged volunteers and leaders of the University, Gulick predicted.

"These volunteers, over time, will play an escalating role in the educational product we offer students," he said. "The result for alumni will be an ever-increasing sense of pride and ownership in their alma mater, knowing they play a large part in perpetuating this style of education that is distinctly Lasallian for future generations."

"People often confuse going to school with getting an education," Boyle said. "It's a part of your history. It helped define who you were and even to this day who you are. You frequently have to tell people where you went to school, and you want La Salle to have that prominence, exclusivity, and measure of success when you do."

At La Salle: Sullivan is a member of the School of Business Advisory Board. He has participated in the Executives on Campus program and Banker's Day. Sullivan has also offered work experiences at Charming Shoppes to La Salle students through the Business Scholars Co-op Program.

Why have you chosen to remain involved at La Salle?

My uncle graduated from La Salle and my brother and I and several cousins all graduated from La Salle, so the University has been a family tradition since the 1940s. I enjoy sharing my expertise and helping to build a relationship between industry and academia.

How has this involvement benefited you?

The Business Scholars Co-op Program has been very successful for us. Our Human Resources Department has reported that students who come from La Salle are highly motivated and very bright, and that they would love to hire them once they graduate.

How do you think La Salle benefits from the involvement of its alumni?

As a member of the School of Business Advisory Board, I am able to give feedback to the University as to what we are looking for in employees, and I have input on the curriculum that will prepare students for the workplace. The end result is that the University delivers graduates who are bound for successful careers.

New Alumni Officers Ready to Serve

Jim Ahern,'70

PRESIDENT

Jim Ahern has been elected President of the Alumni Board of Directors, representing the more than 40,000 La Salle alumni. Ahern, who most recently served as Vice President of the Board, will replace outgoing President Mike Diccicco, '71.

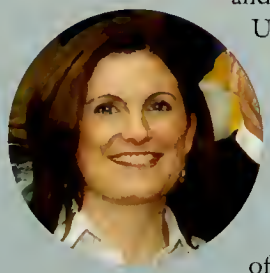
Since graduating in 1970, Ahern has stayed connected with La Salle and has become an active member of the Alumni Association, serving on both the Executive and Finance committees. As President, Ahern hopes to execute the Board of Directors' strategic plan, as well as reach out to more of the alumni chapters and clubs throughout the country.

"Part of who I am today is based on the education and relationships I had when I was an undergraduate at La Salle," Ahern said. "I think I have a sense of indebtedness to the school."

Ahern, who is Area Director at Spherion Corp., lives in Narberth, Pa. He has three children, Brendan, Connor, and Sean, '06. Their mother, Judy, is a 1973 La Salle graduate.

Kristin Fairweather, '97

VICE PRESIDENT



Kristin Fairweather has been elected Vice President of the Alumni Board of Directors. Fairweather is in her second term on the Board of Directors.

Fairweather describes her time at La Salle as the most pivotal years in her life. It was at La Salle where she developed a passion for politics—a passion that carries with her in her current job as Director of Program Analysis at the Pennsylvania Intergovernmental Cooperation Authority.

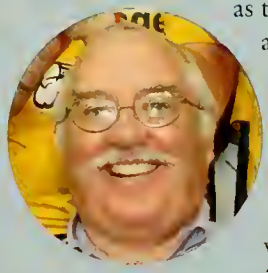
"Three or four years ago, I got reconnected to La Salle," Fairweather said. "I got to know some great volunteers who encouraged me to become more active."

As a member of the Board of Directors, Fairweather is in charge of the Community Service Committee, which has partnered with nearby James Logan Elementary School for various service projects.

Fairweather lives in the Chestnut Hill section of Philadelphia, Pa., with her husband, Clint. They have a daughter, Addison.

Tom Leonard, '70

TREASURER



Tom Leonard has been re-elected to the Alumni Board of Directors as Treasurer. Since his graduation in 1970, Leonard has stayed closely connected to La Salle and looks forward to continuing his role on the Board.

"The Alumni Board is just another opportunity for me to stay connected and be involved in the direction the University is going," Leonard said.

As Treasurer, Leonard also works with the Alumni Association's Finance and Investment committees.

As a partner at PricewaterhouseCoopers in Philadelphia, Leonard often works with La Salle's School of Business to recruit accounting majors to work at his firm.

Leonard lives in Media, Pa., with his wife, Jean. They have four children, Kimberly, Tom Jr., '96, Ryan, '00, and Danielle, '06. Danielle passed away during her senior year at La Salle and her degree was awarded posthumously. To honor her memory, the Leonards and many members of the La Salle community raised money to endow a scholarship in Danielle's name at the University.

Meg Kane, '03

SECRETARY

After actively serving on the Board of Directors since her graduation in 2003, Meg Kane has been elected as Secretary of the Board. Most recently, Kane has served as the Chair of the Young Alumni and Class Programs Committee, which focuses on increasing new alumni involvement.

When Kane was a student at La Salle, she was actively involved with the Ambassador Program, which gave her the opportunity to interact with alumni. With this experience, Kane developed a first-hand understanding of the Alumni Association.

Kane comes from a family of proud La Salle alumni, including her mother, Deborah (Looby) Wood, '75, and her aunt, Loretta (Looby) Hueber, '83.

"We're a big La Salle family," Kane said. "It's a much more personal place and I think that's what attracts people to it. It has a very personal touch to it. I think that's why I'm so passionate about it."

Kane is currently an Account Executive for FCF Schmidt Public Relations.

LA SALLE
SHOULDER TO SHOULDER
Securing the Future

Why I Give Back: Jim Morris, '79

JIM MORRIS HAD A FEW CRITERIA IN MIND AS HE researched colleges. He needed a school that was affordable because, as the third of 10 children, he was paying his own way. He also needed a place that was on a bus route, since he did not have a car and would be commuting from his parents' home in Rockledge, Pa. La Salle fit the bill.

Morris soon realized that, while he had come to La Salle in part for its convenience and price tag, he would stay and succeed because of the quality education. He graduated maxima cum laude in 1979 with degrees in accounting and finance.

"I really enjoyed my La Salle experience," he said. "The atmosphere was enthusiastic and supportive. I was blessed with many terrific professors who really encouraged me and, of course, I made some life-long friendships."

After graduation, Morris received offers from top accounting firms, and he went to work for Arthur Andersen. He switched gears to a job in finance when he was offered a position at SEI Investments in Oaks, Pa., in 1983. Since then, he has been involved in many aspects of the investment business, including sales, sales management, and new product development.

Now an executive in charge of global solutions for SEI, Morris spends about one week out of every month traveling abroad. Back at home, he lives in Lower Gwynedd, Pa., with his wife, Kathy. They have two children. Their son, Andrew, is a junior at George Washington University, and their daughter, Sarah, is a sophomore at Gwynedd Mercy Academy High School.

Morris said his experience at La Salle taught him to always be ready for new things, a skill that has served him well in his varied career.

"I was fortunate to learn early in my career not to be constrained by anything and to be open to new challenges," he said. "If you're constantly open to new things, there's always something else you'll discover about yourself. I believe in the La Salle slogan—Never stop exploring."

Morris admits, though, that while he was busy building his career and raising a family, he did not have a lot of time to devote to La Salle. It was after a chat with Carmen Romeo, '65, a member of the Board of Directors at SEI and a La Salle trustee, that Morris realized that he wanted to get involved with his alma mater.

"Life has been good to me in many ways, so I felt it was time," he said.

Jim and Kathy Morris at their Lower Gwynedd, Pa., home with their children, Sarah and Andrew, and the family cat, Oliver.

Following his drive to explore, Morris became involved in the Alumni Association. He was elected to the Alumni Association Board of Directors three years ago, and he has also volunteered on committees for Charter Dinner and the President's Cup golf tournament.

Morris said he is glad to be reconnected with the University by contributing—both financially and with his time and expertise. Jim and Kathy have been consistent donors to the Annual Fund and made a generous commitment to the University's Shoulder to Shoulder initiative. Morris said he would like to help another generation of students who, like him, may be the first in their families to attend college.

"Someone was generous to La Salle when I was a kid and made my college experience possible," he said. "Now it's my turn to do whatever I can to help to keep La Salle in a position to be able to attract the best and the brightest who might not otherwise have the ability to go to college."

His advice to La Salle students and more recent graduates is not to wait to get involved as alumni.

"A La Salle education is really unique, and the responsibility to carry on the legacy extends out to everybody," Morris said. "It is important for all of us who have benefited to give back. We have to do our job and make a La Salle experience possible for the next generation."

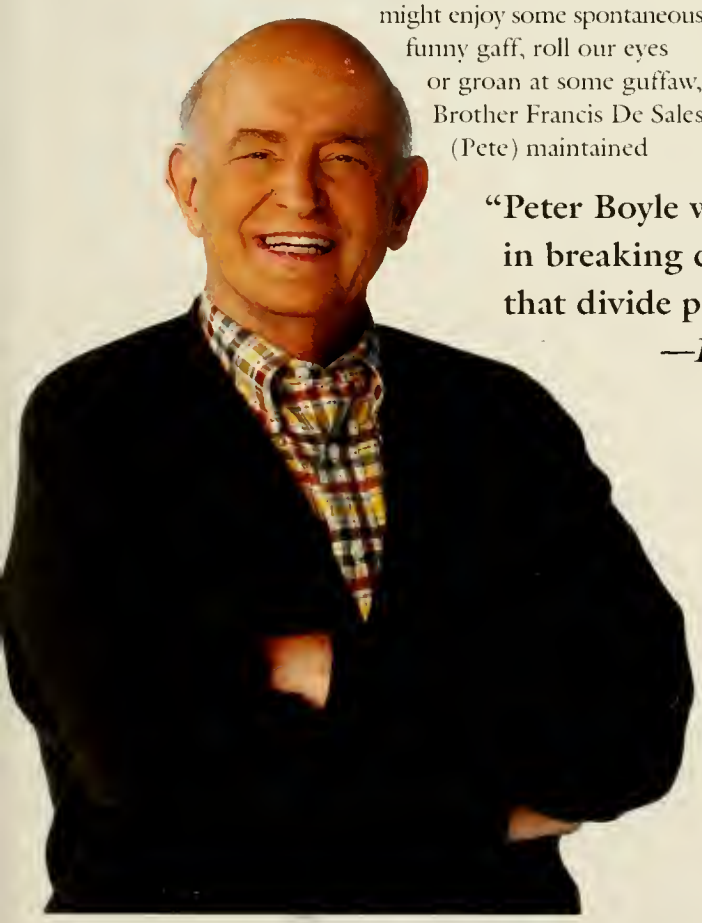
A Tribute to Peter Boyle, '57

BY BROTHER GERARD MOLYNEAUX, F.S.C., PH.D., '58

WHEN MY FRIEND PETER BOYLE PASSED AWAY IN December, many reports cited his years as a Brother or, to the consternation of some, as a "monk." I think Pete would have enjoyed the fuss that followed. Still, the question lingers: Was he a "monk?" The answer? No and yes. Formally, Brothers won't say they're monks, but casually, Pete and all of us used the term, as an example, "the monks at the college" or at St. Gabe's. It was just part of community jargon. Since, as a Brother, Pete had walked the walk, his use of "monk" came readily enough. Ironically, however, while in formation, he was as close to monastic as anybody got.

Pete was always a performer, and instantly, he gave 100 percent to perfecting himself as a Brother. Later in his career, playing Senator Joe McCarthy, he created the image of the politician so well that he developed the same bad back McCarthy had. That's how into a role he would get.

As a novice and then student Brother at La Salle, Pete took silence and modesty to extremes. While the rest of us might enjoy some spontaneously funny gaff, roll our eyes or groan at some guffaw, Brother Francis De Sales (Pete) maintained a grave demeanor worthy of the dourest cloister, his eyes almost always cast down. At recreation time, however, he reverted to the fun guy I knew in high school, creatively commenting (sometimes with cartoons) on every quirk in the community and imitating the lot of us.



"Peter Boyle was proud of his part in breaking down the barriers that divide people."
—Br. Gerard Molyneaux

It was our education psychology professor, Russell Naughton, who broke the pattern and brought Pete back to earth. Faced with grading 20 student Brothers, most dean's-listers and Pete with a 4.0 G.P.A., Russ taught us about the common life. He gave every Brother a B. One layman got an A, but Pete got the real break. With the 4.0 gone, he no longer had to be perfect, academically or monastically. That afternoon at the pool, his antics were comedy-club worthy, and he never got back the gravity of the first three years, no doubt for his own good and, in the long run, to the benefit of the world at large.

Imagine life without the monster of Young Frankenstein or Everybody Loves Raymond's Frank Barone. He once told me that the most popular TV program in Pakistan was Everybody Loves Raymond, and the reason was that people saw him as "just like their dads." He was proud of his part in breaking down the barriers that divide people.

So, for a short time, Pete was a very serious "monk," but I think he was always a Brother, one who carried his Lasallian initiation with him for life as husband, father, and good neighbor. A few years ago, he was looking at some old photos from his time in the novitiate. After 50 years, he still enjoyed the nostalgia and was identifying his classmates by name and by nickname. Clearly, the fond memories lingered in his heart.

In retrospect, we both shared a continuing bond of brotherhood and the professional ties of film. I like to think that Pete's life and mine are variations on the mission of the Christian Brothers and that same call we all accepted at baptism. I'll always cherish his last words to me as he was leaving the event of a tribute given to him by La Salle in the fall of 2005. Though clearly tired from the long day, he smiled and said, "I felt loved."

Br. Gerard Molyneaux is a professor of communication at La Salle. Film and television actor Peter Boyle, '57, died on Dec. 12, 2006. On May 18 at 7 p.m. in the Dan Rodden Theatre, La Salle will present a screening of Young Frankenstein and a panel discussion on the life of Peter Boyle.

Giving a Voice to His Community

Dennis O'Brien, '83, Elected Speaker of Pennsylvania's House of Representatives

BY AMY GARDNER CRANSTON

With his son Dennis Jr. holding the Bible, Dennis O'Brien takes the oath of office after being elected Speaker of the House.

WHEN DENNIS O'BRIEN, '83, WAS YOUNG, HIS FATHER advised him, "No matter what you do in life, you need to reach back and serve your community." The elder O'Brien was speaking from experience. He, along with his own father, was very involved in the local Northeast Philadelphia community, including various civic and parish organizations.

Inspired by his father's and grandfather's commitment to serving their community, O'Brien followed his father's advice. He decided the best way to serve his community was to get involved in politics. So in 1976, O'Brien ran for the 169th District seat in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives.

"I took 100 guys I went to grade school, high school, and La Salle with, and they became my volunteers," O'Brien said. "It was because of them that I pulled a substantial upset to become the first Republican to win this seat."

Little did O'Brien know then that he would pull another substantial upset in the House of Representatives 30 years later.

O'Brien left his House seat after two terms to run for U.S. Congress. After a marginal loss, he decided to run for his old Pennsylvania House seat. When O'Brien enrolled at La Salle in 1970, he wasn't able to complete his degree in business administration due to campaigning for himself and for others. So in 1982, while campaigning for the House seat, O'Brien returned to La Salle to complete his few remaining credits for his degree. That fall, he won back his House seat, and he has held the seat ever since.

As the father of three sons, O'Brien has always been a champion for the rights of children. Last fall, he returned to campus to participate in a panel discussion organized by La Salle student Brian Arty, '07, on The Jessica Lunsford Act. The act is named for the 9-year-old Florida girl who was kidnapped, raped, and murdered by a man who previously had been convicted of sex crimes. A supporter of tougher laws and sentences for convicted sex felons, O'Brien spoke to the campus community about Pennsylvania legislators' role in passing the act.

Children with disabilities are an issue close to O'Brien's heart. He has been praised by child advocates for his passion and commitment to the health and welfare of children, particularly children with autism. Currently, O'Brien serves on the Board of Directors for the Center for Autistic Children, serves as Chairman of the Autism Caucus, and was appointed as the Honorary Chairman of Pennsylvania Autism Force.

O'Brien is quick to acknowledge the impact of La Salle's Speech-Language-Hearing Science Program. "The educational experience La Salle offers students in speech therapy is essential for the development success of the kids I'm advocating for," said O'Brien. "The earlier you can identify a problem, the better you can treat the problem."

In January, O'Brien shocked the Commonwealth when he became the first minority-party member in history to be elected Speaker of Pennsylvania's House of Representatives. At a news conference announcing O'Brien as Pennsylvania's new Speaker of the House, Gov. Edward Rendell praised O'Brien, saying, "The most important thing a politician can have is passion for making the lives of people better."

A First Course in Topology: Continuity and Dimension

BY JOHN McCLEARY, '74

American Mathematical Society, 2006; 210 pp.; $35

The central focus of this topology text is the notion of dimension, which has a meaning from algebra and calculus, but this meaning dissolves in set theory. Continuity, the basic notion in topology, is more subtle than the methods of set theory, but less subtle than analysis and algebra. Does continuity distinguish dimension? The book explores and answers this fundamental question.

John McCleary graduated from La Salle in 1974 with a major in mathematics and pursued graduate work at Temple University, where he earned a doctorate in 1979. He is a professor of mathematics at Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

St. La Salle Series

Why Brothers, Not Priests?

This feature is the second installment in a nine-part series examining St. John Baptist de La Salle, his mission, and its relevance in today's world.

"Brother"

BY BROTHER EDWARD J. SHEEHY, F.S.C., PH.D., '68

IN A CABLE SERIES ENTITLED ROME, the hardy veterans of the 13th Legion often refer to each other as "brother." We see the word used in such varied material as the Bible and "golden oldies" music. De La Salle Christian Brothers sometimes are asked, "Why a Brother, not a priest?" In some ways, the answer remains a simple one. The Archdiocese of Philadelphia has begun an advertising campaign based on "answering the call." Every person has a "call," a vocation as it were, in both employment and relationships. Brothers were "called" to be Brothers. Perhaps our introduction to the term may come from another television series—in a most real sense, we are a "Band of Brothers."

John Baptist de La Salle, the Founder, looked at 17th-century France and saw religious schools for the wealthy. He acutely observed that the need in that time and place remained for a group of teachers to focus on middle- and lower-class boys and their academic and vocational upbringing. He called his teachers "Brothers" for many reasons. I suspect the fact they lived in a community or family (never to be fewer than three, according to the rule), and served as mentors, teachers, and "big brothers" to their students, were important factors then as now. At first, De La Salle wanted to have a few of his followers ordained, to provide priestly services for his communities, but when his first choice died unexpectedly, the Founder took that event as a sign from the Lord that his Order was to remain lay.

When we think of the best traits of an "older brother," in our families, I suspect, we reflect on someone who is a listener, present for us, and an example. In the late 1960s at Calvert Hall College High School in Baltimore, the student government focused on a one-word theme, "respect." "Brothers" in our families or as members of the Order "respect" us and others, and by their leadership and diligence, show us how to respect learning, maturity, and life at all levels. Curiously, members of the larger community often refer to Brothers by shortened first names, Brother Tom, Joe, etc., as a sign of familial respect, not familiarity. Moreover, the mission of the Christian Brothers always has included other members of the "family"; as a "big brother" involves other siblings in activities, the Brothers share responsibilities with dedicated associates, both lay and religious.

The largest male religious order of Brothers in the Church, the De La Salle Christian Brothers have focused on one mission: education. While that view has broadened to include the myriad of activities outside of actual classroom instruction, the primary purpose has remained the same. In the face of at least two crises that threatened the existence of the Order in France, during the French Revolution and late in the 19th century, the commitment of the Brothers to both "faith and zeal"

In the Words of the Founder

"Consider that you are working in your ministry for the building of the church through your teaching of the children whom God has entrusted to your care. These children are becoming a part of the structure whose foundation was laid by the holy apostles. For this reason you must fulfill your ministry as the apostles fulfilled theirs. ... You are successors to the apostles in their task of catechizing and teaching the poor."

—from St. John Baptist de La Salle, Meditations 200.1

Further Reflections

"Brotherhood is a horizontal model that implicitly rejects the paternalism in the vertical model of fatherhood. The Brothers of today want to share with their associates in the educational mission these values implicit in their tradition of brotherhood. Nor do the Brothers consider as excluded from the brotherhood our clerical colleagues who participate in the Lasallian educational mission; as a famous Brother once put it: There isn't any reason why a priest can't be a brother. Perhaps for that reason, there is a certain lack of pretentiousness in a Lasallian institution of higher learning. This isn't so much emphasis on pomp and circumstance. The value placed on association in brotherhood tends to produce a certain atmosphere of informality and friendliness that prevails on a Lasallian campus. This aspect of the Lasallian tradition ought to be pervasive enough to transform an impersonal educational institution into an authentic community where persons meet persons, where mind speaks to mind and heart speaks to heart, where the learning experience is shared

Brother Edward J. Sheehy in the classroom.

(spirit of the Order) has made them true "teachers."

"Brothers" teach academic subjects, it is true. But, perhaps more fundamentally, all teachers actually show "who they are" in the classroom. And so, a values-based education remains at the heart of a "Brothers school." My dad graduated more than 65 years ago from Bishop Loughlin in Brooklyn, N.Y., and—like so many others proud of a Christian Brothers' education—still remains committed to those values learned long ago: "respect," "responsibility," and "readiness" to serve the Church and society. A "Brothers' education" extends beyond the classroom. Students, parents, and graduates may see a Brother at La Salle University, for example, moderating a fraternity, a sport, musical activities, dramatics, etc. This "presence" and "involvement" provides other examples of the special meaning of "Brother" in the educational apostolate.

A Brother by vows, including "association," witnesses to the continuing presence of God and God-given values in our lives. For centuries then, Christian Brothers and their colleagues have helped older and younger adults advance their personal and professional lives through teaching with passion and compassion.

Br. Ed Sheehy has been an associate professor of history at La Salle for nearly 20 years. He is also Vice President of the La Salle Corporation and serves as the faculty moderator of La Salle's men's basketball and football teams.

with persons who call each other friends." —From a talk given by Brother Luke Salm, F.S.C., one of the preeminent Lasallian historians, on the occasion of the 130th anniversary of the founding of La Salle University, on March 18, 1993.

The Brothers' vocation is a vocation to educational ministry, not to sacramental ministry. It is a lay vocation that has more in common with the people in the pew than with the pastor in the parish.

De La Salle established a teaching order of men who were to be neither "seculars" nor "clerics." They were to be dedicated to teaching as "Brothers," consecrated to procuring God's glory and the salvation of the young through the ministry of Christian and human education while keeping some distance from the hierarchal structure of the church. Brothers were not to be involved in any way in clerical affairs, from knowing Latin to leading the singing in parishes. Their place was with the students. The Brothers' communal prayer was not the recitation of the Divine Office but rather those prayers recommended by the church for all its members. —From Touching the Hearts of Students: Characteristics of Lasallian Schools, by Brother George Van Grieken, F.S.C.

Part 2

Timeline of Events

The continuing story of the Lasallian Christian Brothers, 1719 to 1805

On Good Friday 1719, St. John Baptist de La Salle dies at age 67 in Rouen, France.

The dying Founder gives his last blessing to the Brothers. Painting (detail) by Giovanni Gagliardi (1906)

In 1725, Pope Benedict XIII formally approves the Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools with a Papal Bull, validating its educational mission and its contribution to the Catholic Church by stating, "John Baptist de La Salle … founded an Institute known by the title of the Brothers of the Christian Schools for the glory of God and the relief of the poor."

From 1725 to 1792, the Brothers train teachers for work in country and city parishes throughout France and in early schools in Montreal, Canada.

From 1792 to 1805, the Institute is legally terminated during the French Revolution. Only a small group of Brothers in some of the Papal States of Italy and in Rome continue to function officially.

Investment Expert Addresses Economic Outlook

Jeremy Siegel, a best-selling author and finance professor at the Wharton School and one of the nation's top investment experts, addressed alumni, business partners, and Philadelphia-area business leaders at the sixth annual Economic Outlook Forum on Jan. 23.

At the forum, presented by La Salle's School of Business and the Business Network at the Union League of Philadelphia, Siegel explored the topic of smart investing in his presentation, "What's Ahead for the Markets Now?"

Siegel is the author of several books, including The Future for Investors: Why the Tried and True Triumphs Over the Bold and New and Stocks for the Long Run.

A new group, the Women's Giving Circle, has formed to celebrate the impact that women alumni and friends of La Salle are having on the philanthropic life of the University. The group, which will meet several times a year for networking, socializing, and recognition, had its first gathering, a cocktail reception at the La Salle Art Museum, on Jan. 25. Madeleine Viljoen, Ph.D. (center), Director of the Art Museum, leads a tour of the museum's collection.

In Memoriam

Brother J. Stephen Sullivan, F.S.C., a La Salle trustee for 15 years, passed away Jan. 11, 2007. He is buried in Gate of Heaven Cemetery in Hawthorne, N.Y. He was 86.

Br. Stephen served on La Salle University's Board of Trustees from 1983 to 1998. He was named an emeritus board member in 1998. He was awarded an Honorary Doctor of Laws degree by La Salle in 1979.

He was president of Manhattan College from 1975 to 1987.

La Salle Offers Annuity Investment Opportunity

The University Advancement Office has begun a Charitable Gift Annuity (C.G.A.) Program that is among the most popular planning gift tools. Since the C.G.A. offers donors an opportunity to make a gift of relatively modest amounts while retaining a fixed income for life, many retired persons who are looking for more income from their investments find the program attractive.

Mike Duffy, '72, Dean of the School of Business at the University of San Francisco, the first enrollee, wrote: "I'm happy to get La Salle started on this program because it's great, particularly for persons 65 years of age or older, especially those with appreciated assets, like stock. With interest rates and dividends at historic lows, now is the time to consider a Charitable Gift Annuity because you can earn a guaranteed rate of up to nine percent or more for the rest of your life on assets you contribute, take a charitable deduction now, avoid capital gains tax, lower your estate tax exposure, and benefit La Salle—all at the same time."

A C.G.A. is a simple contract between you and La Salle. In exchange for your irrevocable gift of cash or appreciated property, La Salle agrees to pay you and/or your spouse, or up to two annuitants you choose, a fixed annuity for life. Your payments are guaranteed by La Salle's assets. They are also backed up by a segregated reserve account. The principal is invested by La Salle's professional investment team and reverts to La Salle when the contract ends. La Salle takes care of everything—your quarterly distribution checks, regular investment reports, and all annual tax forms.

Professor Leads University Involvement in "Philadelphia North" Economic Development Effort

Led by Nancy Jones, Ph.D., Director of the Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT) program, La Salle University is one of 11 partners in the new Keystone Innovation Zone (KIZ) program, entitled BioLaunch 611+KIZ.

Established by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in 2004, the KIZ program designates zones across the state, aligning partners such as educational institutions, private businesses, and commercial lending institutions. KIZ focuses on how these partners can promote jobs and economic development in the biosciences.

BioLaunch 611+KIZ promotes "Philadelphia North" as a prime location for biotech companies to conduct research and business. Philadelphia North encompasses the area from North Philadelphia into Bucks County, and from the Delaware River west to Chester County. New Department Encourages Creative Solutions

The Integrative Studies Department, created in the spring of 2006 within La Salle's School of Arts and Sciences, offers several interdisciplinary minors, partners with other universities and Philadelphia public schools, and seeks to integrate academic disciplines, people, and approaches to complex problems, such as AIDS, world hunger, and drug addiction.

Students are encouraged to imagine how the liberal arts relate to real-world problems and solutions. For example, to study the world's dependency on oil, a geography class could look at the effects on the earth; an economics class could examine the correlation between supply and demand; and a history class could look at the wars fought over it.

"The Department of Integrative Studies will complement the existing liberal arts majors, offer creative opportunities for liberal arts faculty, and open the liberal arts to a new generation of students," said Marjorie Allen, Ph.D., Director of the Integrative Studies Department and an associate professor of English.

Integrative Studies will continue, reintroduce, or initiate several programs as minors, including Leadership and Global Understanding, Women's Studies, Forensic Science, Ethnic Studies, and Peace and Justice Studies. The new department will also design courses, which could be offered in more than one of these minors.

Alumni, Students, Faculty, Friends Bid to Support Service Trips

The fourth annual Lasallian Service Trips Auction, held on Feb. 8, 2007, raised $21,000 for the Lasallian service trips. That total exceeded the goal for this year's auction by $3,500 and improved upon last year's total by $5,500.

The Lasallian service trips are Los Niños in Tijuana, Mexico; Project Mapendo in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania; Habitat for Humanity in Americus, Ga.; and Project Appalachia in Harlan, Ky. The trip to Georgia for Habitat for Humanity is new this year.

The auction item that drew the highest bid was a week in Myrtle Beach, S.C., which sold for $1,200. Martha Kutteh, '08, whose parents offered the vacation at their home in Myrtle Beach for the auction, is participating in Los Niños. After the first week sold, the Kuttehs offered a second week to any bidder willing to match the $1,200 bid. Another bidder quickly accepted the deal.

Before the bidding began, alumni were invited to a pre-auction reception, which attracted many graduates who participated in La Salle's service trips while they were students.

La Salle's Nonprofit Center Takes on a New Partner

The Nonprofit Center at La Salle has increased its consulting services by acquiring the Executive Services Corps of the Delaware Valley (ESCDV).

THE NONPROFIT CENTER
La Salle University

Faced with financial difficulties for several years, ESCDV approached The Nonprofit Center about creating a partnership that would preserve its mission of serving the nonprofit community.

The Nonprofit Center, part of La Salle's School of Business, offers a wide variety of services to nonprofits, including consulting on such issues as strategic planning, fundraising, governance, marketing, and human resources.

Adrienne Jenkins, former president of ESCDV, cited The Nonprofit Center's 25 years of experience in nonprofit management, a diverse range of funding sources, a proven track record specifically in consulting, and its relationship with La Salle University as factors supporting the new partnership.

The influx of ESCDV volunteer consultants, many of whom are retired business executives, will expand The Nonprofit Center's ability to serve nonprofits, especially smaller ones with limited resources.

"This partnership will have a positive impact on the Delaware Valley nonprofit community by enabling more organizations to utilize expert consulting to strengthen their proficiency in critical areas," said Laura Otten, Ph.D., Director of The Nonprofit Center. "The result will be a stronger nonprofit community."

Explorer Runners Aim for National Prominence

BY KALE BEERS, '95

"DYNASTY" IS A WORD YOU SOMETIMES HEAR USED in the sports world to characterize a team or organization that has achieved superiority or great success over a prolonged period of time. A true dynasty usually transcends the individual stalwart.

La Salle distance running is not a national dynasty. However, in terms of Atlantic 10 competition during the tenure of Coach Charles Torpey, Explorer running has certainly reached "dynasty" status. And if Torpey and his runners have anything to say about it—the first sentence of this paragraph will soon be inaccurate.

The foundation for Explorer greatness in cross country and track and field was laid long ago by the great Olympians Ira Davis, '58, and Al Cantello, '55, one-time world-record-holder John Uelses, '65, and the slew of standouts who competed before and since. However, only now—with 16 NCAA appearances, All-Americans and numerous Academic All-Americans, 87 All-A-10 Performers, 30 All-Region performers, and a dozen NCAA Provisional qualifiers since 1998—has excellence become commonplace. The norm. Expected.

Sean Quigley, '07

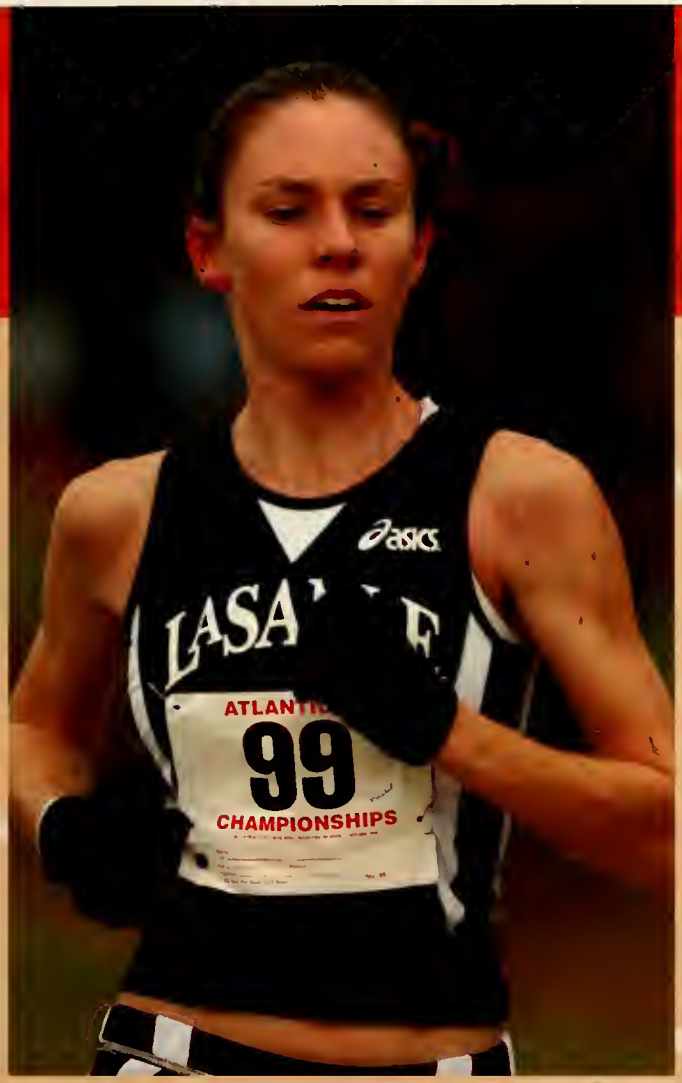
The infamous San Francisco 49er juggernaut that won five Super Bowls between 1982 and 1995 saw its star personnel shift from Joe Montana and Dwight Clark to Steve Young and Jerry Rice with an arsenal of supporting cast members who could have been front-line players elsewhere. Whereas the Chicago Bulls dynasty died, was resurrected and subsequently died again with the coming and going of Michael Jordan.

"All of the runners want to go to nationals as a team and to be nationally ranked. That's the next step for us—it's never good enough." —Coach Charles Torpey

The evolution of the Explorer program follows an arc akin to the first example. The work first accomplished by harriers Brian Gallagher, '98, Troy Harry, '98, Marc Cianfranni, '98, and Terry Carroll, '98, is now being tended to by stalwarts Sean Quigley, '07, and Rachel Papin, '07, and their supporting cast—and has the trappings of a program ready to jump to the national level.

The Explorers swept the 2006 A-10 Cross Country Championships on the backs of individual Performers of the Year Quigley and Papin. For Papin, it was an A-10 record third straight individual title. Quigley continued to compete in his second straight NCAA Championship, finish 15th, and become the University's first two-time All-American in cross country. In the 2007 indoor season, the Explorers posted three NCAA provisional qualifiers, while Quigley made the NCAA Championships outright and earned All-American status again. During the 2007 outdoor track season, Papin earned an NCAA provisional qualification in the 10-kilometer (10K) event. Quigley made it a clean sweep of his senior season by also qualifying for the NCAA Championships in outdoor track after setting a La Salle record in the 10K. He also qualified for the 2007 U.S. Track and Field National Championships and for the 2008 U.S. Olympic Trials in the marathon, and he provisionally qualified for the Olympic Trials in the 10K.

For Torpey, who has now been crowned with an unprecedented 14 Coach of the Year awards corresponding with as many conference championships, Quigley and Papin represent the program's arrival at that "next level."



Rachel Papin, '07

"In the early years, what Harry (A-10 Performer of the Year), Gallagher (All-American), and Carroll (A-10 outdoor Performer of the Year), were doing was proving that we belonged in the fast heat, the fast section," Torpey said. "They proved we belonged with the best."

On the heels of those great runners was another wave of outstanding performers, including Toniann Razzi, '00 (NCAA indoor qualifier), Kevin Myles, '01 (1998 NCAA cross country qualifier), Todd Witzleben, '03 (two-time NCAA cross country qualifier), and Jenna Darcy, '00, who made A-10 titles and NCAA qualification an expectation rather than a phenomenon. Torpey added, "Now Sean puts us up there on a national level and right there with Sean is John Butler as another piece of the whole."

"Our runners have always had the personality that they would be happy, never content," Torpey said. "Papin has already won three A-10 titles, but she is intent on running even faster next year. All of the runners want to go to nationals as a team and to be nationally ranked. That's the next step for us—it's never good enough."

He points out that, up until now, producing NCAA runners was an extended process

"Kids come in as 'good' high school runners but because they are so tough and driven they became 'great' runners by their junior or senior years. We now hope to get involved with student-athletes where that process is shortened and they are effective sooner," he said.

Like the great dynasties of the 49ers, success does not all depend on marquee names. It is the supporting cast that creates longevity. For Torpey's troops, those people are runners like Danielle Schopf, '07, Christa Plummer, '09, and Butler, '06, who he feels could be front-line at most other programs.

"It's like (Quigley and Papin) are five-star generals, but then we also have six four-star generals and a dozen three-star generals while many of our competitors have a bunch of infantrymen," Torpey said. "So, for every Carroll, there was Brigid Benner ('98) and Johanna Grochowalski ('99). For every Razzi, there was Ndidi Obichere ('04) and Sheila Klick ('04), and for every Witzleben, there was a Tim McAteer ('03), Bryan Skelly ('04), and Ryan Fennelly ('05)."

Torpey is about to enter his 15th season as the mentor of Explorer runners and the drive to succeed has never been greater.

"Ten years ago, if you would have told us that we would get three NCAA provisional qualifiers in one day (which happened this season at Boston University) we would say, 'Hey, that would be great.' But now we want to take it further."

Quigley and Papin each has one year of competition remaining. The successors who will usher Explorer track and cross country to yet another level are ready to step in.

Alum Honored For Civic and Community Involvement

For his many civic accomplishments, David Jones, '75, recently received La Salle's African American Alumni Association (AAAA) President's Community Service Award.

"David was selected because of his continued support to his community in Somerset County (New Jersey), to the La Salle University African American Alumni Association, the African American Student League, and the La Salle community," said Dana King, AAAA President.

Jones graduated from La Salle in 1975 with a degree in labor relations, after he had earlier dropped out, gotten into trouble with the law, and then turned his life around.

Jones arrived at La Salle in 1964 on a cross country scholarship, but pressures and tensions caused him to drop out. That's when things started to go wrong in his life. He was arrested and convicted for drug possession, but while in prison, Jones was able to make a positive change in his life, and he headed up the Prisoner's Rights committee. He graduated from a drug rehabilitation program and later received an award from the organization "for distinguished service to himself and his community."

Later, he led a demonstration to change Somerset County's employment practices to help minorities find jobs with the government. His efforts lead to the creation of a Human Relations Commission in his borough.

After graduating, he became involved with AAAA and mentored La Salle students.

"My personal interest is in assisting others in finding and reaching their maximum God-given talents," said Jones, who lives in South Bound Brook, N.J. "There is no greater joy within me than to be a part of someone's life that has changed for the better."

The son of Polish immigrants, Binkowski grew up in Trenton, N.J., and served in the U.S. Army in the South Pacific during World War II, being discharged in 1946 as a first lieutenant. He earned his bachelor's degree from La Salle in only two years and then earned a master's from the University of Pennsylvania. He joined La Salle's Education Department in 1949 and retired in 1984.

Brother Joseph Grabentsein, F.S.C., '73, the University's archivist, said Binkowski "was one of the best teachers I ever had. His approach was practical. Embarking on a New Vision

Matthew S. McManness, Vice President for Business Affairs

IN 2004, LA SALLE INTRODUCED A NEW VISION FOR the University led by La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss. This new vision became known as the University's Strategic Neighborhood Reinvestment Plan. The President, Board of Trustees, and key University administrators set out an ambitious plan to fundamentally improve the Northwest Philadelphia neighborhood economy through a significant commitment of leadership, support, funding, and academic resources. As an integral part of the University's Strategic Plan, the Reinvestment Plan set forth the key elements necessary to define the University's community priorities.

The primary goals of the Neighborhood Reinvestment Plan included:

- improving the services that the University offers to the neighborhood, such as a stronger presence through lighting and greening programs;
- creating partnerships with key community organizations in order to stimulate new investment in real estate and critical properties;
- developing joint ventures that will improve commercial and retail development; and
- collaborating with businesses and other entities to accelerate socio-economic development in the Germantown area.

While the University has started to implement these strategies as critical initiatives, the most substantial development has occurred through the University's purchase of the Germantown Hospital property, located just across Wister Street from Main Campus. This 25-acre property with 500,000 square feet of buildings was purchased from Albert Einstein Health Network, while Einstein and La Salle have developed a partnership arrangement that will allow important health-care units vital to the community for services and jobs to remain at the site.

Along with the addition of the contiguous properties of the Manna Bible Institute and the Presbyterian Church at Chew and Wister streets, the University has expanded its presence in the community by a total of nearly 32 acres. This expansion represents a one-third increase of our campus footprint and creates a phenomenal opportunity for the University to have a strategic impact through our Neighborhood Reinvestment Plan.

With this exciting opportunity for the University has come the need to further update the University's Strategic Plan. To update the plan, the University has begun significant efforts to develop our presence on the new "West Campus." One critical decision has been to relocate the School of Nursing and Health Sciences. The new location will house the entire program under one roof on West Campus and establish space to allow the further development and expansion of the school's programs.

When combined with the development of the "Shoppes at La Salle"—the grocery store and retail complex on our Good Shepherd property—and the construction of the expanded Science and Technology Center, La Salle's positive impact on the community has reached a new level.

These new opportunities provide for new jobs, both in construction and ongoing support of these properties. Our efforts will help revitalize critical neighborhood needs and services while establishing La Salle's presence through our primary goals. These elements of our plan are mission-driven and continue to clearly define our role in the city of Philadelphia.

As you can see, the University's engagement in the neighborhood is guided by planning that is strategic and implementation-oriented. La Salle University intends to play a significant role in neighborhood reinvestment supporting broad community areas, the establishment of critical real-estate needs, the creation of effective data-driven investments, and the continued development of strategic community relationships. We look forward to future updates for our alumni and your involvement in implementing a new strategic vision for La Salle University.

constructive CHANGES

building and rebuilding on campus

Affirming the University's commitment to its community, both on campus and off, and to its mission, La Salle has embarked on an ambitious plan to expand its campus footprint and improve its facilities. Within just a few short years, students will be conducting experiments in a new wing of laboratories in a renovated and expanded Science and Technology Center, walking a tree-lined path through campus to a bridge leading to West Campus, and drinking coffee, socializing, and shopping at a new retail center. In the following pages, you will read about the vision and generosity that have made these changes possible, and about how a thoroughly modern revamping of campus has stemmed from a 145-year tradition of serving La Salle's students and neighbors.

BY THOMAS W. DURSO

SCIENCE DOESN'T HANG AROUND and wait for the times to catch up. It marches along resolutely, sometimes deliberately, often with surprising speed, always pushing the advancement of human knowledge in new directions, regardless of whether or not we're ready.

It's no surprise, then, that the Roland Holroyd Science Center, home to La Salle's science programs since its opening in the early 1960s, is no longer the advanced facility it once was. For example, Holroyd's classrooms are set up to facilitate traditional lecturing, a pedagogical style that is fading fast. The explosion of basic research by faculty members in the sciences has overtaxed the building's laboratory space, leading many to take their projects off campus.

In short, science, research, and teaching have all evolved considerably in the last half-century, and reflecting and accommodating those advances have become primary concerns.

"Our building might have been sufficient in 1960 when it first opened," said Norbert F. Belzer, Ph.D., '64, Chair of the Biology Department, "but 47 years has seen much change, and there is only so much 'retrofitting' one can do."

And so when La Salle officials began contemplating the stunning campus overhaul that is just underway, a new science facility was at the top of their to-do list, to give the University's state-of-the-art equipment and its human capital—talented faculty researchers and driven students—a proper setting.

"It's not as if science education has been at the bottom of our priorities. Far from it," said Tom Keagy, Ph.D., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences. "What's being planned is a great place to house our equipment and offer us a lot more flexibility in how we teach and conduct research."

A Growing Campus

Along with a commitment by the University's senior leadership to upgrade science facilities have come opportunities to launch new initiatives on and around campus that are just under way. On one level, these sweeping initiatives—campus renovations, acquisitions, and development projects—announced by La Salle officials over the last few months are a breathtaking and bold set of changes. Organizations whose legacies stretch back nearly 145 years don't often get the chance to recast themselves so completely.

On campus, Benilde Hall will be knocked down, new buildings will be erected, and existing buildings will be gutted and refitted.

The University's footprint has increased by dozens of acres, and major retail projects will deliver the kind of products and services students have requested while helping to revitalize the contiguous neighborhoods.

Yet on another level, these changes represent nothing more than institutional evolution. The times, they are a-changin', but then again, haven't they always been? La Salle is simply keeping up with those changing times.

What makes recent efforts unique, however, is the intricate web of parties and programs that have combined to produce such transformational initiatives. Strategic planning, academic affairs, student services, campus life, community relations, and fundraising have come together on a myriad of projects that represent once-in-a-generation opportunities.

Plans for Expansion

Holroyd's shortcomings were not news to the Board of Trustees, which had been examining ways to revitalize the facility for years, recalled former trustee Brother Joseph J. Willard, F.S.C., '64, now executive assistant to La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C.

"It's been a long-term desire of the University to try to renew our programs and offerings in science," Br. Joseph said. "The building has outlived its present useful life. It needs a total transformation."

Seven years ago, the Board approved a comprehensive plan to upgrade science facilities and a major gift initiative to fund it.

The project begins this fall when ground is broken for the construction of a new laboratory facility on land adjacent to where Benilde Hall sat for nearly 60 years. The 38,000-square-foot lab wing will extend westward from the northwestern corner of Holroyd to the Administration Center.

Before that can happen, of course, University officials must account for staff and services in Benilde. The building is scheduled to be razed this summer and its occupants were sent to various other facilities across campus, a process that had La Salle officials, led by Br. Joseph, working furiously to figure out who would go where and for how long.

Opportunity Knocks

As fundraising and planning for the Science and Technology Center gathered momentum, an unparalleled and unexpected opportunity came knocking at the University's door.

Albert Einstein Health Network (AEHN), headquartered a few blocks east of campus at Broad Street and Olney Avenue, was looking to divest itself of most of the underutilized property of Germantown Hospital, located across Wister Street.

Ten million dollars later, La Salle was the proud owner of 25 contiguous acres and 500,000 square feet of building space, 300,000 square feet of which will be used by the University. The acquisition of what is now known as West Campus was announced in May.

La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., and Albert Einstein Health Network C.E.O. Barry R. Freedman

With the Science and Technology Center project causing a mind-boggling amount of personnel shuffling, the University immediately got to work refitting certain buildings on the hospital property to accommodate offices. Some of Benilde Hall's occupants, including the offices of University Communications and Alumni Relations, were sent to the fifth floor of the newly named St. Benilde Tower. Three other floors in the tower are next on the list for construction and are scheduled to house the University's School of Nursing and Health Sciences, presently in Wister Hall, beginning in December. Holroyd's current occupants then will be relocated to Wister next May so that the building can be gutted, rebuilt, and integrated into the new laboratory wing.

Once all construction is complete, by the fall of 2009, La Salle's natural sciences (including biology, chemistry, and biochemistry), computer science, mathematics, and psychology programs will have a state-of-the-art facility where teaching, research, and collaboration can blossom in ways never before experienced on campus. Solar panels and a vegetative roof will give the Science and Technology Center a distinctively green bent, while lounge areas, classrooms, labs, and open spaces have been designed to foster the kind of interdisciplinary cooperation, mobility, and flexibility that 21st-century science demands.

"We work now in small groups, and we want students to participate and interact with each other," said Nancy Jones, Ph.D., Director of the Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT) Program. "If chairs are all in rows, that doesn't happen. The same things are occurring in the laboratory spaces—students are designing their own experiments rather than doing cookbook things, and they're working in groups."

"It's going to be good for the campus as a whole," said Patrick Rafferty, a senior ISBT major from Northeast

Philadelphia. "It will be more of a gathering site than just a building of classrooms. It really is going to be the centerpiece of the campus."

La Salle has been successfully promoting student-faculty collaboration, but efforts have been limited because of the deficiencies in facilities, another reason University officials are yearning for the opening of the new building.

"It's going to open up a whole new world," Keagy said.

Construction of the Science and Technology Center is the culmination of the Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future major gift initiative, which has raised more than $27 million for the new facility and the University's endowment. In fact, over the past seven years, the University, with the support of alumni, friends, and other key stakeholders, has raised more then $83 million in unrestricted and restricted support. These gifts and grants have been used to support scholarships, capital improvements, and educational program enhancements.

Terry Travis, Assistant Vice President for Development, noted that Shoulder to Shoulder provided the impetus for the University to build a major gift program, securing the largest gifts from alumni in the University's history.

"Colleges and universities that thrive do so because they have alumni who invest themselves and their resources so as to ensure that their alma mater has what it needs to compete successfully," Travis said. "The success of Shoulder to Shoulder has demonstrated that La Salle University's alumni have the capacity and commitment required to perpetuate the Catholic and Lasallian educational heritage at La Salle University for the benefit of succeeding generations.

"Alumni and stakeholder investment in a new state-of-the-art science and technology facility and increases in our scholarship endowment make a clear statement about commitment to educational excellence and access for all. And because our alumni have demonstrated their commitment, other key civic and philanthropic partners are stepping forward to help us continue to be strong and vital."

"It's a great opportunity for us to be involved in the course of bringing that [hospital] campus back to life. It's great that La Salle is going to come in and modernize it. It was underutilized and an underperforming asset to us. We're very confident it's a great move that will be great for the community."

—Bruce Bashwiner, AEHN's Vice President of Facility

Community Partnerships

Br. Michael's presidency has included a major community relations component. Under his leadership, the University launched in 2004 the Strategic Neighborhood Reinvestment Plan, which set priorities for improving the economy of La Salle's neighborhood, and created the Office of Economic and Community Development.

These initiatives caught the attention of officials at Einstein, who had fielded multiple offers for the Germantown Hospital site after putting it on the block. Ultimately it decided "to sell to La Salle versus a developer because there was a much bigger upside to the community if La Salle was the ultimate owner," said Bruce Bashwiner, Einstein's Network Vice President of Facility, and because Br. Michael and AEHN C.E.O. Barry R. Freedman had developed such a good relationship.

"It's a great opportunity for us to be involved in the course of bringing that [hospital] campus back to life," Bashwiner said. "It's great that La Salle is going to come in and modernize it. It was underutilized and an underperforming asset to us. We're very confident it's a great move that will be great for the community."

As part of the Germantown Hospital transaction, La Salle inherited some independent leases with physicians. Einstein retained ownership of two buildings, Penn Tower and the Long Term Structured Residence, and will continue to provide clinical services to the community. A condominium association has been created to oversee campus operations, and Einstein also has entered into long-term leases with La Salle for some spaces, including the emergency room, a nursing home, and physician facilities. Certain areas on the campus, including the loading dock and roads within the campus, will be considered common areas and will be shared by both Einstein and La Salle.

To connect Main and West campuses, new pedestrian walkways flanked by attractive lighting and landscaping are being installed this summer on Main Campus, from the rear of Connelly Library, along the St. Miguel Townhouses, and ending near the gate onto Wister Street. Improvements are also being made to the Clarkson Street roadway and sidewalk behind the townhouses and the Building Blocks Daycare Center.

Later, a bridge will be constructed over Wister Street to connect Main Campus with West Campus. The bridge will lead to an outdoor landscaped terrace and a two-story glass atrium ending in an illuminated glass wall that will be constructed onto the facade of St. Benilde Tower. The bridge and atrium project is estimated to be completed during the summer of 2008.

Around the same time it purchased Germantown Hospital, the University acquired two properties adjacent to the site, Manna Bible Institute and Presbyterian Church, totaling approximately 7 acres. Manna Bible Institute, situated just west of the hospital property, had suffered a fire that left the parcel in disrepair, as its abandoned buildings became sites for smaller fires and dumping. La Salle plans to demolish the fire-damaged structures and clear the property of all debris.

In addition to helping the University determine a new use for the site, a $200,000 grant from the William Penn Foundation will be used to assist La Salle in partnering with the community to plan and develop several large-scale projects that will have a dramatic impact on the quality of life in the neighborhoods surrounding campus.

William DeVito, head of the Office of Economic and Community Development, will serve as Project Manager of the grant. DeVito has developed strategic partnerships that have demonstrated La Salle's commitment to its community, the city, and the region and that have brought about several new initiatives, including plans for the first supermarket in the neighborhood in 40 years.

A good neighbor

Given Br. Michael's focus on building relationships within the community, it's not surprising that the University was so interested in developing the Good Shepherd site at Chew Avenue and Church Lane into retail facilities that could be used by the La Salle community as well as its neighbors.

Thanks to a partnership with Moreland Development helped along by State Rep. Dwight Evans, '75, La Salle will cut the ribbon next fall on a 50,000-square-foot Fresh Grocer, Starbucks café, FedEx Kinkos, GameStop, plus other stores collectively known as the Shoppes at La Salle.

"La Salle has been very involved in the process," said Eric Seidman, a principal at Moreland. "It's a development not only for the University but also for the community. We spent a lot of time with the University getting their insights and what they wanted to see go where. It's a win-win-win for the developer, the University, and the community."

Farewell to a Campus Fixture

Benilde Hall dedication ceremony in 1948

A CONVOY OF FLAT-BED TRUCKS TRANSPORTED pieces of the future Benilde Hall to La Salle in 1948, where the structure was centrally assembled on campus to accommodate overcrowding at the college during the post-World War II enrollment boom. Six decades later, Benilde Hall will be demolished to pave the way for more campus progress with the renovation and expansion of the Science and Technology Center.

Benilde Hall is the last remaining of a handful of buildings that were brought to campus after World War II and altered to meet campus needs, including a building that once housed the Physical Plant and Leonard Hall, which once stood between Benilde and McShain halls. Originally a wooden structure, Benilde was part of a complex of administration buildings—perhaps a barracks—of the Susquehanna Ordnance Depot near Williamsport, Pa., which manufactured and sold TNT for the armed forces during World War II.

After the war, the Federal Works Administration divvied up buildings from the ordnance depot among seven colleges and universities, including La Salle. At the time, the campus was in desperate need of the space to accommodate the influx of students—especially veterans—in the post-war years.

In early 1948, the precursor of Benilde Hall was disassembled in Williamsport, transported to La Salle, rebuilt, recovered in cement block, and then overlaid with red brick to match other campus buildings. Construction was completed by the start of the fall semester in 1948, adding

The Saint Behind the Structure

Benilde Hall was named for a 19th-century Christian Brother who was beatified (the step before sainthood) a few months before the new building was dedicated. St. Benilde, also known as St. Benildus, was canonized in 1967 as the first Christian Brother to be named a saint after St. John Baptist de La Salle, who founded the order.

St. Benilde was born Pierre Romançon in 1805 to a French farming family. A small and frail-looking boy, he was not cut out physically to be a farmer, but his enrollment in a Christian Brothers school led him to his calling as a teacher. He joined the Brothers in 1820 and served at several Brothers' schools in south-central France, including a more than 20-year stint as director of a school in Saugues, France.

Known as a strict disciplinarian and rigorous teacher, St. Benilde took special care in preparing 12-year-olds for First Communion. He also looked after his students by preparing meals in the Brothers' kitchen for hungry students, converting old Brothers' robes into coats or pants for them, and spending hours tutoring students who learned more slowly than others. He referred to all students, regardless of age or background, as "Monsieur."

During St. Benilde's tenure in Saugues, the area saw a large number of vocations join the Christian Brothers, with as many as 300 young men entering the order.

When St. Benilde died at age 57, former students vied to carry his casket to the cemetery, mourners spilled into the public square from the crowded church, and people plucked blades of grass from nearby his tomb as "relics."

In his lifetime, St. Benilde quietly introduced many innovations to the Brothers and to the teaching profession in general. He admitted older students to give them their first chance at an education, experimented with evening classes for adults, and became more involved with local townspeople than was customary for Brothers at the time. He was distinguished by his commitment to religious life, teaching, and the notion of teaching as a special vocation in itself.

Pope Pius XI, speaking in support of St. Benilde's cause for eventual sainthood in 1928, lauded St. Benilde's endurance of the "terrible quotidianum," or daily routine. "Sanctity does not consist of doing extraordinary things," the pope said, "but in doing ordinary things extraordinarily well."

10,000 square feet of space to campus with nine additional classrooms, six faculty offices, and a student reading room.

From 1948 to 1971, a wide range of courses, from English to economics to philosophy, were offered in Benilde. Later, several campus departments, including Admission, Financial Aid, Career Planning, and the News Bureau, occupied space in the two-story building.

In recent years, Benilde Hall has housed offices for University Ministry and Service, the College of Professional and Continuing Studies, Alumni Relations, and University Communications. As plans get under way to demolish the building, these departments are scheduled to be relocated to other parts of campus. University Ministry and Service will move to South Campus, the College of Professional and Continuing Studies will shift to the Administration Building, and Alumni Relations and University Communications will join the other divisions of University Advancement on West Campus.

Rt. Rev. Msgr. Francis J. Furey, rector of St. Charles Seminary (far right) and Brother Gregorian Paul (second from right), La Salle's president at the time, unveil a plaque on Benilde Hall as the building is dedicated.

Students and staff members who attended classes or worked in Benilde fondly recall the building's quirks. Fred Foley, La Salle's Director of Grants, who worked in Benilde for several years after being appointed Vice President for Development in 1986, remembered the building being the last stop on the campus's original heating route.

"When the first buildings in that lineup already had heat in the winter, it wasn't until around 7 or 8 a.m. most winter mornings that the pipes in Benilde Hall would predictably bang and clang to announce the arrival of the warm air," Foley said.

Despite its shortcomings, Benilde Hall filled a need for a growing campus.

"It was a busy, busy place," said Bob Shaefer, '54, a former Director of Public Relations. "Every classroom and office was used throughout every school day."

Every university in the country must deal with town-gown issues, and La Salle is no different. The University has taken a proactive approach to neighborhood relations, helping to form the 201st Legislative District Advisory Council with State Rep. John Myers. The body comprises representatives from more than a dozen institutional, residential, and community groups, who meet quarterly to exchange information and talk through issues. In addition, La Salle officials spent considerable time reaching out informally to community leaders to let them know of the school's development plans with respect to Good Shepherd, Germantown Hospital, and on-campus construction.

"People are very interested in anything that's going to positively impact the quality of life in the community," said Ed Turzanski, the University's Assistant Vice President for Government and Community Relations. "Jobs and rehabbing the housing in the area, along with attracting the kind of amenities that both students and neighbors will enjoy, are high on people's list of interests. We've taken some pretty dramatic steps to try to contribute in a very overt fashion to the needs that the surrounding community has."

According to Myers, the success of the 201st Council has had symbolic as well as practical effects.

"We thought it was important to demonstrate there can be a partnership among the institutions, community leaders and residents, and elected officials," he said. "To my pleasant surprise, a lot of what I thought needed to happen, La Salle did as well. As a result of this, we forged this relationship. The old era of 'Let's not talk to one another' has been put to rest within the institutions as well as the community."

Many of the community development initiatives were fostered by a study the University commissioned a few years ago from The Reinvestment Fund (TRF), a community investment group, to determine how La Salle might become more involved in the neighborhood. TRF will be a major investor in the Good Shepherd project and will continue working with the University on future development planning.

"In many neighborhoods you have anchor institutions, like universities and hospitals, that are place-based," said TRF President Jeremy Nowak. "They're not moving. They have a self-interest in having a vibrant, growing community. Places like La Salle can play a huge role, and we think they're a great example. It has lots of things it can do and is definitely headed in the right direction."

A Commitment to Success

Construction and redevelopment are about much more than shiny new buildings with pretty landscaping. They signal that an institution "is moving ahead and is a vital, growing entity," in Belzer's words. In other words, the Science and Technology Center will send a strong message to prospective students in all majors, to prospective faculty members in all fields, and to prospective donors and investors in all areas.

Besides offering more updated places to teach, learn, and conduct research, the pending changes—specifically, West Campus and the new science and technology facility—will provide critical hands-on training to the students who will use them, Rafferty said.

"The Science and Technology Center should give students a good look at what they'll face in the field," Rafferty said.

"In the end, these building and rebuilding efforts are about mission," Br. Joseph said. "An institution that calls for 'preparing students for informed service and progressive leadership in their communities' can set no finer example than by serving and leading in its own community. The Brothers' founder may have articulated that a little differently in 1680 than we do today, but the Christian Brothers have continued to focus on urban communities for our schools."

Why We Give Back: The Keenan Family

LA SALLE
SHOULDER TO SHOULDER
Securing the Future

John J. Keenan, '52, and his wife, Alice

AT THE AGE OF 13, THE LATE JOHN J. KEENAN, '52, began a unique 62-year relationship with the Christian Brothers as a student of West Catholic High School in Philadelphia, said his wife, Alice Keenan. Had it not been for the devotion and encouragement of the Brothers, Keenan might never have attended La Salle, let alone chair the English Department from 1978 to 1985.

One of the Brothers at West asked Keenan where he was planning to attend college, and Keenan told him he could not afford it, Alice explained. The Brother then arranged for a partial scholarship for Keenan to attend La Salle.

Because of this generosity, Keenan was able to enter La Salle College as an undergraduate in 1948. Four years later, he had graduated and returned to West Catholic as an English teacher. He also taught in the Evening Division at La Salle before joining the faculty full time in 1959.

"As a student at La Salle, John valued the people that he came to know there. He continued to admire and respect the Christian Brothers' constant striving to provide a quality education to their students," Alice said. "John received from the Brothers and many dedicated lay teachers a solid background in academic subjects, but, even more importantly, he saw them demonstrate in their own lives a lifelong commitment to helping their students reach their potential as thoughtful and caring people."

That commitment had a profound influence on Keenan's career. He became one of the University's most beloved teachers, earning La Salle's Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching in 1967–68. He committed his time to La Salle, edited the internationally renowned literary journal Four Quarters, which was once published at La Salle, and wrote several University publications. Keenan retired in 1995 and was named professor emeritus.

According to Alice, it was the University's sense of community and commitment to Christian values that created an exceptional education for John Keenan.

"He recognized that a caring teacher not only guides students academically but also, with wise counsel, often has a lasting effect on the rest of a student's life," Alice said.

Throughout his life, Keenan never forgot the generosity of those who made it possible to continue his education, and he gave back to create opportunities for new students. Appropriately, the Keenan family also is establishing a scholarship in his name.

According to James Butler, Ph.D., once John Keenan's student and now a professor of English at La Salle, "John taught what one ought to know but, more importantly, exemplified how one ought to live. Thanks to his family's generosity, the influence of this extraordinarily decent man—one of La Salle's finest—will be felt by even more students."

John and Alice Keenan had four children who went on to become the next generation of La Salle students. Their oldest son, Mark, attended La Salle before leaving to become a Lower Merion Township police officer. Mark died of cancer in 2001. Maureen, '80, majored in English, while Tom, '86, and Paul, '87, both met their future wives as students at La Salle. A third generation is represented by Maureen's daughter, Christie Sands, '08.

"We know how much it would mean to John to be able to help another deserving student benefit from a La Salle education," Alice said.

"John Keenan's career at La Salle was characterized by giving of himself—to his students, to his colleagues, and to La Salle College and then University," said La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70. "His generosity of spirit and action is a model for all Lasallians to emulate."

Motivos Bridges a Cultural Gap in Higher Education

BY MARIAN BUTCHER

JENÉE CHIZICK, M.A. '05, LIKES TO SAY THAT HER CAREER in the publishing business began when she was nine years old, delivering The Buffalo News in her rural western New York hometown of Lyndonville. Through the years, she has spent significant time studying, traveling, and working in five Spanish-speaking countries, and she worked for 10 years in higher education and publishing. Most recently, she worked in Spanish-language media, volunteered with youth-serving organizations in Philadelphia's Hispanic community, participated in an intensive Rotary professional exchange to Mexico, and completed her master's degree in La Salle's Bilingual-Bicultural Studies Program. This past year, Chizick drew upon all of her diverse educational and professional experiences to launch a new bilingual magazine, Motivos.

Motivos was created with a specific audience in mind: Hispanic teenagers and young adults who want to learn more about college and career choices but who face limited access to information that addresses their unique interests and challenges, Chizick said. After researching why Hispanic students complete college degrees at a much lower rate than other groups, the need for and mission of her magazine became clear.

"I wanted to figure out how I could create something that could help students overcome the factors that keep them from completing a post-secondary degree, reach their dreams, and achieve their full potential," she said. "Education is the key that opens the doors to positions at the decision-making levels and allows your voice to be heard. Everyone should have this opportunity."

Chizick chose the name Motivos, meaning motives or reasons, after exploring potential names with students, colleagues, and community leaders. She decided the name had to transcend cultures, inspire readers, and focus on the motives that drive what a person does.

Motivos, which will be published quarterly, is a full-color glossy magazine written primarily in English, but with summaries of articles in Spanish. Each issue will include inspirational stories written by young people who have overcome hurdles in order to attend college or begin a career. There will also be a section just for information on college, including words of advice and tips on the application process, financial aid, and scholarships. A careers section will feature role models for students to emulate.

An editorial board and a student advisory board guide the content, while freelancers and students themselves contribute articles, poetry, illustrations, and photography.

The first issue was released in November 2006 to schools, churches, youth organizations, recreation centers, college fairs, and youth development conferences in the Greater Philadelphia region and the Lehigh Valley. Motivos is now circulated statewide with an estimated 40,000 readers and continues limited distribution in southern New Jersey and parts of New York state. More than 300 middle and high schools receive the magazine, as well as community organizations, colleges, universities, and some retail areas.

Chizick hopes to expand distribution of the magazine while still offering localized information and content so that it remains relevant to students, no matter where they live.

Before launching Motivos, Chizick spent several years immersing herself in Hispanic culture, partially out of an interest in her own heritage (her mother's side of the family has roots in Spain and Puerto Rico). Wanting to improve her Spanish language skills and her understanding of issues unique to the Hispanic community, Chizick enrolled in La Salle's Bilingual-Bicultural Studies Program.

"I was looking for a master's program to combine language, culture, and business, and La Salle's program stood out," Chizick said. "You can't learn about language without the influence of culture."

For her master's degree project, Chizick set out to better understand the factors that contribute to the low college graduation rate among Hispanic students. She interviewed people in Philadelphia and elsewhere who work with students in tutoring, after-school, and college preparation programs, as well as the students themselves. Chizick found that family responsibilities, language barriers, financial constraints, the availability and/or knowledge of support services, and the level of respect and acceptance of people of diverse backgrounds all had an impact on students' likelihood of completing a college degree.

Through volunteering with nonprofits like the League of United Latin American Citizens and the National Hispanic Institute, Chizick met students who had dreams of becoming lawyers, chefs, or entrepreneurs, but who were misinformed in terms of the training required to reach their goals.

Chizick's research and interactions helped to formulate her vision. She said she hopes that Motivos can become a platform for building understanding within the Hispanic community about the importance of education, of sharing resources, and of helping young people to achieve their goals.

"I'm just one person," she said, "but as a team, as a community, we can find a way to work together and make it happen."

Lasallian Spirituality Today

This feature is the third installment in a nine-part series examining St. John Baptist de La Salle, his mission, and its relevance in today's world.

Sustaining the Spirit of Faith

BY MICHAEL SMITH, PH.D.

Michael Smith

I DIDN'T COME TO La Salle University to be an evangelist.

I came to teach communication in the country's fifth-largest media market, a welcome change from the Indiana backwaters where I had taught before. I came to teach at a place that valued teaching, where small class sizes would allow me to work more closely with students.

But I didn't come to be an evangelist.

After 14 years, though, I have come to understand St. John Baptist de La Salle's reflection that "in an imperceptible way and over a long period of time ... one commitment led to another in a way that I did not foresee in the beginning." And while I don't list "evangelist" as the title on my business card, these commitments have transformed the way I view the connections between my teaching and my spirituality.

This "retrospective sense-making" represents one important aspect of Lasallian spirituality: recognizing God's hand in the choices that we make, and trusting in God's providence as we commit ourselves in service to students. Throughout St. La Salle's writings, other aspects of his spirituality emerge: the constant presence of God; the role of zeal "for the instruction of children and for bringing them up in the fear [awe] of God ..."; and a view of teaching as vocation that seeks to "... inspire God's love in the hearts of those whom you instruct."

Whoa. This is pretty profound stuff for a guy who just came here to teach communication. It's one thing for a community of Brothers to commit themselves to these ideals. But how do we sustain the spirit when we go home, not to a community of Brothers bound by vows of association, but to families where spouses constantly remind us of our matrimonial vows and children who, while reminding us of God's holy gifts, can also be holy terrors to their siblings?

In my life as a Lasallian educator, sustaining the spirit of faith involves seeing the practical connections between one's life and one's work.

One of my heroes, the singer-songwriter-activist Harry Chapin, sang "all my life's a circle." For those who commit themselves to living Lasallian values, the connections between spirituality and our educational role circle around our lives, each nourishing and animating the other. I come from a family of educators, where both my grandmother and great-aunt, a School Sister of Notre Dame, taught in Catholic schools for more than 50 years—about the same length of time that my dad practiced public relations. You might say I joined the family business. Being a cradle Catholic helped me understand La Salle's roots in the Catholic Church, but Lasallian spirituality is "catholic" in its universal appeal to those from a variety of faith traditions, with a number of Lasallian institutions serving largely Muslim and Buddhist communities. My formal introduction to Lasallian spirituality started at home, when my wife gave me the book Praying with St. John Baptist de La Salle by Brother Carl Koch. Finding a way to connect one's life and vocation helps to sustain our spirituality and allows us to "minister" to our students.

Lasallian spirituality is an active, practical spirituality. While reflection nourishes the soul, faith without action is lifeless. Brother Gerard Rummery wrote, "Lasallian spirituality is lived through the ... activities which are typical of an educator's day." Lasallian educators practice their spirituality through everything from the preparation of classes to the interaction with students. I don't preach when I teach.

Timeline of Events

The continuing story of the Lasallian Christian Brothers, 1805 to 1900

In 1829, the Teachers' College on the Lower Seine in Rouen opens to provide training for teachers.

Between 1830 and 1848, 48,500 workmen become students in the Brothers' evening classes for adults, a system that the French government imitated.

During the 19th century, the Brothers continue their pioneering work in France with boarding schools, homes for troubled youth, and instructional work in prisons.

The Brothers' first efforts overseas were based in French-speaking countries. They then moved into Asia and Singapore in 1852 and learned Spanish

However, some of my courses require students to complete projects for community organizations, which not only helps them learn more effectively but also raises their awareness of how their academic training can be used for the greater good. When Lasallian spirituality animates both our lives and our work, both are sustained.

The educational philosopher Parker Palmer noted that we don't just teach what we know; we "teach" who we are. St. John Baptist de La Salle understood this 300 years ago, and it's that connection between our hearts, our souls, and our minds that helps us sustain the mission and our spirituality.

Michael Smith, Ph.D., is an associate professor of communication and directs the graduate program in Professional Communication. An alumnus of the Lasallian Leadership Institute, he was named La Salle University's Distinguished Lasallian Educator in 2005.

We invite feedback on this issue and welcome ideas for future installments of the series. Please contact Marian Butcher at butcher@lasalle.edu.

Further Reflections

The nature of spirituality assumes different characteristics in different vocations. However, Lasallian spirituality is specifically defined in the life and works of St. John Baptist de La Salle.

"When one looks at the Lasallian part of Lasallian spiritually, two things are immediately evident ... 1. Lasallian spirituality is a spirituality that has the school as its setting, the teacher as its focus, and the salvific potential of education as its inspiration. De La Salle's writings show that the Lasallian educator's life with his or her students constitutes the very center of his or her religious experience. For the Lasallian educator, the school is the privileged place where God is to be encountered.

"There is no separation between the professional journey and the spiritual journey. Both are aspects of a single vocation and commitment to education. ... 2. The Life of Christ lying at the core of De La Salle's commitments also lies at the core of Lasallian spirituality. ... Christ is to be found in the teacher ... in the student ... in the work of education ... in the prayer of education." —From Touching the Hearts of Students: Characteristics of Lasallian Schools, by Brother George Van Grieken, F.S.C.

"God himself calls the teacher and chooses him for the 'ministry' of education. His daily work in school is an expression of God's will. ... So the teacher sees himself, in his relationship with the children, as a 'minister of God' and an 'ambassador of Jesus Christ.'" —From Lasallian Themes 3, by Christian Brothers Generalate, Rome, 1997.

Part 3

In the Words of the Founder

"That which is of the utmost importance, and to which the greatest attention should be given in an Institute, is that all who compose it possess the spirit peculiar to it; that the novices apply themselves to acquire it; that those who are already members make it their first care to preserve and increase it in themselves; for it is this spirit that should animate all their actions, and be the motive of their whole conduct..."

—From The Work Is Yours: The Life of Saint John Baptist de La Salle, by Brother Luke Salm.

to open schools in Ecuador in 1863. Under Brother Phillippe Bransart's leadership as Superior General, the Brothers opened 1,002 new Lasallian schools and institutions from 1838 to 1874.

By 1900, the Christian Brothers' ranks had grown from 160 in 1810 to nearly 15,000 around the world, and 10 percent of them were teaching in 35 countries.

Employee, Alumna, and Civil Rights Activist

Marie Hicks Dies at 83

BY JON CAROULIS

MARIE ALEXANDER HICKS, '80, A CIVIL RIGHTS ACTIVIST AND PIONEER, DIED ON APRIL 19. SHE WAS 83.

Hicks moved near the Germantown Medical Center in the 1960s and began working at La Salle University's dining hall. Shortly after, the University started admitting women and Hicks enrolled in 1974. For six years, she worked during the day and attended classes in the evening before earning a bachelor's degree in sociology.

"I was very proud of her that she graduated. All her children were proud of her," said Junius Hicks, one of Marie Hicks' four sons who also is a University employee and is working toward an M.B.A at La Salle.

"My mother always wanted to pursue a college degree. She always enjoyed education," he added. "She loved studying. She was on the Dean's List every semester she was here."

After graduating from La Salle, Hicks worked with homeless women at Mercy Hospice Center of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. She retired in 1990 but continued to volunteer in community nursing homes and elementary schools until the last years of her life.

But Hicks is remembered most for her 40-year civil rights fight and strong efforts to integrate Girard College before the U.S. Supreme Court. When asking why the prestigious all-boys Girard College boarding school was surrounded by a tall, looming wall, Hicks didn't like the answer she received.

"I was told the wall was to keep blacks out and that made me angry. I wanted to do something about it, because it wasn't right," she said. "Girard College was a really good school, and my boys should have the opportunity to go there."

Hicks began working with the city's NAACP branch to end segregation at the school.

It was in 1954 that the Supreme Court announced its landmark decision in the case of Brown v. Board of Education to desegregate schools—and the fight with Girard College began. Struggling to integrate the school resulted in a 14-year lawsuit that included two trips to the U.S. Supreme Court, picketing, protesting, and a visit by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. During her fight against segregation, Hicks endured death threats and hate mail to her family.

Hicks' persistence slowly paid off. Her son Theodore entered Girard College in September 1968 as one of only four black students. Her older son, Charles, was admitted several months later. As students, their days were filled with harassment and hatred, but Hicks empowered her sons to stand tall.

"It was hard on the boys, especially Charles, who was the only black boy in his class," she said. "But I explained to them the importance of what they were doing and why they needed to be strong."

Hicks said she lived her life to help others and be a positive role model. She believed education was the key that unlocked doors.

In 2004, Hicks received the President's Award from the University's African American Alumni Association for her contributions to the community. Presenter Daniel J. Tann, Esq., '82, then the Association's president, said, "Ms. Hicks is a part of Philadelphia history and the civil rights movement in that she led the charge to change Girard College. Without her courage, minorities and women would not be receiving the benefits of education at Girard College.

"You would never know by looking at her that she faced racial hatred in the '60s, held her ground and prevailed."

Sharmain Matlock-Turner Receives Leadership Award for her Dedication to the City of Philadelphia

La Salle University recently honored Sharmain Matlock-Turner, President of the Greater Philadelphia Urban Affairs Coalition (GPUAC), with its Leadership Award during the 15th annual Charter Dinner, which marks the University's founding in 1863.

Matlock-Turner, a member of La Salle's Board of Trustees since 2000, received the award for her dedication to improving the quality of life in the City of Philadelphia and surrounding region.

"In the time I've known Sharmain as a member of our board, I've been impressed with her commitment to the city of Philadelphia and its people—particularly children and youth," said Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, President of La Salle. "She's an inspirational leader and, I'm proud to say, a friend."

During her speech, Matlock-Turner lauded the University for focusing on the future.

"It has embraced the idea and developed the plan that unites the interests of the University and the community more strategically, and I am glad to have participated in this endeavor," she said.

Matlock-Turner noted La Salle's community involvement, including student and staff volunteers, scholarships to local students, the La Salle Nonprofit Center, on-campus community events, hiring staff from the community, and partnering with GPUAC.

"La Salle's commitment to education, to the city, and to the neighborhood are the right thing to do and they are the smart thing to do," she said.

Sharmain Matlock-Turner and her husband, Tony Turner

A native of Virginia, Matlock-Turner moved to Philadelphia at an early age and has lived in Northwest Philadelphia since 1972.

In 1999, she became the first woman to lead GPUAC in its 38-year history. GPUAC has grown to an annual budget of $33 million and nearly 400 full-time employees under her leadership.

Matlock-Turner holds a bachelor's degree in education from Temple University. Previous to GPUAC, she was Associate Vice President, legislative and community affairs, for Mercy Health System. She also was Chief of Staff to the late State Sen. Roxanne H. Jones for nine years.

School of Business Offers B.S. in Accounting and M.B.A in Four Years

A new program through the La Salle University School of Business will allow high-ability students to earn a dual Bachelor of Science in accounting and Master of Business Administration (M.B.A.) degree starting this fall.

The four-year BS/MBA program fits with the University's reputation of a strong Accounting Department in combination with an innovative, full-time M.B.A. program, according to Paul Brazina, Interim Dean of the School of Business.

Instead of the traditional five-year Certified Public Accountant program, students will complete the 150-hour C.P.A. requirement in four years, and move through accelerated undergraduate studies by taking summer courses. Students will complete their M.B.A. requirements during the fourth year.

Selection into the new program will be highly competitive. Those entering the program as freshmen must have a combined 1200 or higher on the critical reasoning and mathematics sections of the SAT exam. They also must maintain a 3.2 G.P.A. during their course of study.

Swinging into Another Successful President's Cup

About 300 golfers and friends of La Salle University raised nearly $230,000 for student scholarships and financial aid during the ninth annual President's Cup at Blue Bell Country Club on April 23.

La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, Bud Hansen Jr., '58, and Bud Hansen III, '90, hosted the event as more than 200 people played 18 holes at the country club and at Commonwealth National Golf Club in Horsham, Pa. Activities included entertainment, dinner, awards for the day's top teams, and a live auction.

Author Jim Finegan, '51, treated attendees with excerpts from his sixth golf book, Where Golf is Great. He autographed copies of the book, which detailed the golf courses of Ireland and Scotland.

The winning foursome from Anexinet Corp. was Diego Calderin, '83, Mike Darragh, Mike Erdlen, and Mike Rittenhouse.

Collette Dougherty of North Wales, Pa., won the grand prize of $10,000 in the President's Cup raffle. Other prizes auctioned off by Paul Capra were a seven-night Caribbean cruise, a week's stay in Sea Isle City, N.J., and an Eagles helmet autographed by quarterback Donovan McNabb. Silent auction items, including rounds of golf at local courses, were available for bid both at the event and, for the first time, online prior to the event.

Next year's President's Cup will be held on Monday, April 21, 2008.

Price Named First Recipient of Brother Scubillion Rousseau Justice Award

From developing a possible breakthrough cancer treatment to hosting a Rwandan refugee in his home, William A. Price, Ph.D., professor of chemistry, has proved his service stretches beyond the local community.

In recognition of his dedication to service, Price recently received La Salle University's first Brother Scubillion Rousseau Justice Award, which honors University faculty or staff who understand their roles in creating a more just world.

Price mentors high school students and has participated in service trips to both rural and urban areas. In his 21 years at La Salle, Price has done extensive research and most recently developed a compound that could ultimately result in a breakthrough cancer treatment.

Price's chemical compound LS-5 (named for La Salle) can drastically reduce a cancer patient's dosage of radiation treatment by reducing the number of good cells destroyed during radiation.

At the award ceremony, Brother Robert Kinzler, F.S.C., Director of University Ministry and Service, said Price incorporates service and advocacy into professional life, dealing with issues of cancer, AIDS, global warming, alternate energy sources, and the effect of these issues on vulnerable populations.

The award was created in the name of Brother Scubillion Rousseau, who dedicated 34 years to educating the enslaved natives of the island of Reunion in the Indian Ocean. In the final years of his life, Br. Scubillion assisted a local pastor in visiting the sick, winning over sinners, encouraging vocations, and even performing seemingly miraculous cures.

A resident of Glenside, Pa., Price received a bachelor's degree in chemistry from The College of Wooster and a doctoral degree in synthetic organic chemistry from the University of Maryland, College Park. He has received numerous research awards and grants, including a Fulbright Scholarship.

Alumni Receive Accounting Awards

Three alumni recently received the Michael A. DeAngelis Award during La Salle University's 41st annual Accounting Awards dinner.

Recipients Edward Lemanowicz, '91, Lisa Mallon, C.P.A., '85, and Kristin Wentzel, Ph.D., '90, associate professor of accounting, were honored for their professional achievements. The Jack Reardon Young Alumni Award was presented to Edward Chiosso, '98.

Lemanowicz is a partner and chair of the International and Domestic Tax group of global law firm Dechert LLP. Based in the Philadelphia office, Lemanowicz focuses on federal tax law and has assisted clients with significant international restructuring transactions to minimize foreign taxes and efficiently manage U.S. foreign tax credits.

Mallon is the chief executive officer of Mercy Suburban Hospital in East Norriton, Pa. She began her career in the health-care audit division of Arthur Andersen and achieved manager status before exiting the public accounting field. Before joining Mercy, Mallon was vice president at Cooper Medical Center, St. Mary's Medical Center, and Chestnut Hill Hospital.

Wentzel began her career with KPMG Peat Marwick. She has taught at Temple, Rowan, and Drexel universities. She has published articles in numerous trade and academic journals, with research focused on managerial and behavioral issues in accounting.

Chiosso was awarded the Jack Reardon Young Alumni Award for his continuing involvement with the Accounting Department and the University. A senior manager at KPMG LLP since 2002, he is a member of the firm's training and methodology team.

Chiosso also recruits on La Salle's campus for KPMG and attends La Salle events on behalf of his firm. He coordinates the fundraising drive for La Salle alumni at KPMG, which raised more than $37,000 last year.

Yale Professor Speaks, Alum Honored at Grimes Lecture

President of the American Psychological Association and Yale professor Alan E. Kazdin, Ph.D., headlined the 28th annual Grimes Lecture at La Salle.

The professor of psychology and child psychiatry at Yale University delivered his lecture on "Treatment of Aggression and Antisocial Behavior in Children and Adolescents" to La Salle faculty, students, and alumni.

Kazdin is a leader in the psychology field and serves as Director of the Yale Parenting Center and Child Conduct Clinic.

The Grimes Lecture is named for the Psychology Department's founder and first chairman, Brother Vincent Grimes, F.S.C., Ph.D. In addition to Kazdin's speech, the department presented the annual John P. Dondero award to John Norcini, Ph.D., '74.

Norcini was honored as an alumnus who provides the practice of science or psychology according to the humanistic values of the life and teachings of the late John P. Dondero, Ph.D.

Norcini is the President and C.E.O. of the Foundation for Advancement International Medical Education and Research whose mission is to improve international medical education. His academic focus is in the area of the assessment of physician performance. Norcini also serves on the editorial boards of five peer-reviewed journals and has been published extensively.

'Super Sid' is Awarded a Shining Star

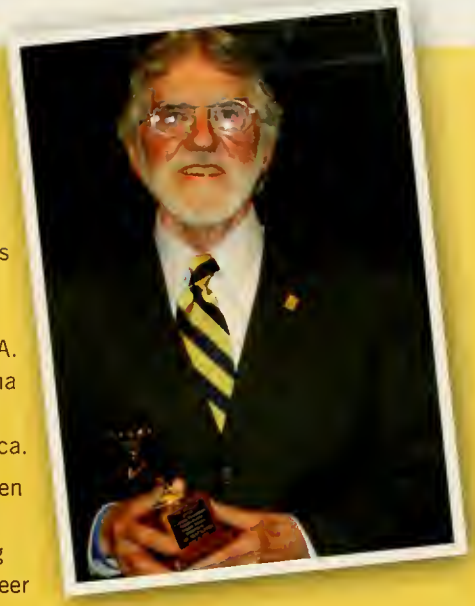
The dedication of Sid MacLeod, assistant professor of communication, has earned him the annual Shining Star Award, presented by the Communication Department on April 20.

"Super Sid," MacLeod's nickname, says it all—there's nothing he hasn't tackled since joining La Salle University in 1959. In fact, MacLeod has kept so busy that he never considered the length of his tenure.

"It just seemed there were always things that had to be done, and I did them," MacLeod said.

According to Brother Gerard Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58, founder and professor of the Communication Department, MacLeod's day begins at 7:30 a.m. as he helps students, works on Channel 56 productions, or edits documentaries. Long after others have returned home, MacLeod tapes basketball games at the Hayman Center, where players and coaches know him as "Super Sid."

"He's passionate, compassionate, dedicated to La Salle, enthusiastic, and caring," said Lynne Texter, Chair of the Communication Department. "He teaches by example, working with students and colleagues in and out of the classroom."



MacLeod, originally from Chicago, earned a B.S.S. in economics from St. Mary's College in Winona, Minn., and an M.F.A. in speech and drama from The Catholic University of America.

The award is given to a professional with an outstanding communication career who also has a record of community service. In addition to the award, a fundraiser was created to start an endowment fund in MacLeod's name.

MacLeod also has received the Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching in 1994 and was named an honorary Christian Brother in 2000.

A Higher Degree of Competition

BY STEVE MAIR

Clockwise from top left: La Salle graduate students Marc Rostant, Ryan Moseley, Kerry Schamberger, and Jenna Darcy continue competing in University sports.

WHILE LA SALLE STUDENT-ATHLETES MAINTAIN EXCELLENT AND TIMELY graduation rates each year, some are coming back hungry for more—both on the field and in the classroom.

A select group of student-athletes who have received their undergraduate degrees remain eligible to compete in their respective sports as graduate students. Since the 2001–02 academic year, 21 student-athletes have chosen to continue education and competitive sports while enrolled in graduate school.

"These student-athletes could easily walk away after receiving their undergraduate degree," said Brother John Kane, F.S.C., Director of Academic Services. "They are outstanding students who could begin successful professional careers. However, their passion for their teams and to the learning process is still burning and they choose to stay. Their commitment ... is a great source of pride for us."

Over the past five years, nine University sports (see sidebar) have benefited from the contributions of these dedicated graduate students.

"What impresses me most is the commitment these students have to both aspects of their college life," said Director of Intercollegiate Athletics and Recreation Tom Brennan, Ed.D. "They are entering into a more complex, involved world of academics, as they remain dedicated to a sport they've been playing for years and obviously have a great love for."

In addition to academic success, many students have received conference, regional, and national recognition for their athletic accomplishments. They have developed the life skills necessary for success in the world beyond college.

"Many of these student-athletes are the best students in their graduate program," said Faculty Athletic Representative Annette O'Connor, Ph.D. "Their ability to balance practice, competition, and travel is not always easy, but they handle it with self-confidence and poise."

These student-athletes have excelled with the help of coaches and teachers, whose influence is relevant both in the classroom and on the playing field. Faculty members have inspired them to continue their education, while coaches have taught them how to develop their skills.

O'Connor said, "Not only do they represent La Salle well in everything they do, they also serve as wonderful role models and mentors for their teammates and the student body as a whole."

American Completes Term as Superior General of the Society of the Sacred Heart

At the tender age of 13, while attending Sacred Heart school in Bethesda, Md., Clare Pratt found the love of her life—Jesus. In 1959, after two years in college, Clare returned to Sacred Heart where the sisters had taught her to become a member of their order.

"I realize now that it was their warmth, their love for one another, and their individuality, despite the uniformity of pre-Vatican II religious life, which attracted me to the Society of the Sacred Heart," said Sr. Clare. "I have never regretted my decision."

In 1969, after the close of Vatican II, Sr. Clare attended La Salle's Religious Education master's program and specialized in Liturgy/Sacraments. She valued the daily noon Eucharist and team-teaching of Father Gerard Austin, O.P., and the Rev. Louis Weil, an Episcopal priest. The education served her well as a liturgy planner and leader of song at a Hispanic parish school in Houston and while working at Regina Coeli prison in Rome.

Sr. Clare taught in Philadelphia, Princeton, N.J., Boston, and Houston before heading to Rome in 1994 as Secretary General of the Society of the Sacred Heart. In 2000, she was the first American elected Superior General of the order.

"What I love most about what I do is having contact with our sisters in the 44 countries where we are located," she said. "My chief role is to further our unity and vitality—we have deep bonds and a great appreciation of our internationality."

Her destination and ministry have not been determined when the term as superior general ends next year. However, Sr. Clare will be welcomed back into her province in America with open arms. "The U.S. may be a first-world country," she said. "But the needs are immense and I will not be idle!"

Witty Alumni Get Last Laugh over Spammer

From left, Matthew Lally, '05, and Dave Terruso, '01, are two of three La Salle alumni who have audiences rolling with laughter as members of Animosity Pierre.

Whoever said that the spam infiltrating La Salle e-mail accounts isn't useful? "Animosity Pierre" was just one of dozens of spammers who bombarded the La Salle student e-mail account of Matthew Lally, '05, and unknowingly became the namesake for a sketch comedy group. The mysteriously-named delinquent also inspired the group's angry French mascot and proved to be an amusing fictional character in live shows.

In November 2004, Lally and Graham Rowe, '05, members of La Salle's comedy group, Improv 101, decided to feed their insatiable appetite for sketch comedy by creating their own group. Roommate Scott Hicken, '05, and friend Dave Terruso, '01, were immediately on board and the group began writing, rehearsing, and eventually choosing a name from Lally's illustrious list of spammers.

Pierre made its successful debut at La Salle with an hour-long performance in April 2005. The following year, the boys continued writing and workshopping their own sketches and became a trio after Rowe returned home to Connecticut. The three built up their repertoire with an appearance in the Philadelphia Fringe Festival and several well-received performances at local venues, including Helium Comedy Club, the Five Spot, Abilene's, Khyber, and the Shubin Theater.

Just recently, Pierre took third place in Project Breakout, a national short comedic video contest that drew hundreds of entries and votes from online viewers and three professional judges. The group is currently working on new short videos for its Web site, www.animositypierre.com, which will also feature "Inventioners," a short serialized cartoon Lally and Terruso are creating.

In Memoriam: The Rev. John A. Guischard, '38

The Rev. John A. Guischard, '38, who was Chair of the Modern Languages Department at La Salle for nearly 20 years, died on May 15. He was 91.

Guischard graduated from La Salle High School in 1934 and continued his education at La Salle College. As a college student, Guischard established the University's first fraternity, Sigma Phi Lamda, and became its first president.

In 1942, Guischard received his master's degree from Villanova University. He returned to La Salle High School for one year as a faculty member and then became an assistant professor at La Salle College. In 1945, he became the first Lasallian to earn his doctorate from Laval University in Quebec, Canada.

He was Chair of the Modern Languages Department at La Salle from 1946 to 1965, becoming a full professor of French in 1960. According to the La Salle Collegian in 1954, his "sacrifice of time and devotedness to students and their problems ... characterized the entire teaching career of Dr. Guischard."

During his 24-year teaching career, he provided opportunities for students to study abroad from 1960 to the early 1990s by establishing La Salle-in-Europe in Fribourg, Switzerland. He was instrumental in launching La Salle's literary journal Four Quarters, and he was Director of Student Organizations from 1960 to 1963. He also was elected Alumni Association President from 1960 to 1962 and was honored for his contributions in promoting the study of modern languages.

At 49 years old, Guischard donated his home on 20th Street to the University and left La Salle to study for the priesthood at Beda College in Rome, Italy.

He was ordained in 1968 for the Diocese of Burlington in Vermont. After his ordination, Guischard filled many roles, including parochial vicar, pastor, campus minister, and diocesan administrator.

Brother Charles Gresh, F.S.C., '55, Director of Major Gifts, recalls Guischard "as a lively, loyal, astute 91-year-old gentleman who loved to share his superabundant knowledge of La Salle lore."

A Philadelphia native, he was born in 1916 to the late Vernon and Agnes (McGrath) Guischard. He resided in Rutland, Vt.

Activities Draw Alumni Back for Reunion

More than 500 alumni and friends gathered for networking receptions, a golf outing, class dinners, and other events during Reunion Weekend on May 18 and 19.

A Welcome Back Reception at La Salle's Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa., and a Young Alumni Party at Finnigan's Wake in Philadelphia greeted returning alumni on the first night. Back on Main Campus, a "Night at the Movies," featured Young Frankenstein in the Dan Rodden Theatre. A panel discussion followed about the movie's star, the late Peter Boyle, '57, led by those who knew Boyle professionally and personally.

REUNION '07 ... reunite, revisit, rediscover

On Saturday, alumni who had traveled back to campus participated in a full slate of activities, including an Alumni Open golf outing at Limekiln Golf Club, a bus trip to the King Tut exhibit at the Franklin Institute, and tours of campus, the Art Museum, and the Belfield Estate.

After Saturday night's class dinners, all enjoyed entertainment at the Night in Vegas event on the quad.

2006–07 President's Report

Dear Alumni/ae and Friends of La Salle:

On behalf of La Salle University, and especially our students, I want to offer my heartfelt appreciation to our loyal benefactors. The support we receive is essential in keeping La Salle the dynamic educational community that we have been and that we pledge to continue to be. I encourage you to review the Honor Roll of Donors section of this magazine, which recognizes the generosity of our supporters.

This year, my report is distinctive for three reasons. First, we celebrate the successful culmination of our Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future major gift initiative. Second, we have transitioned from our 2001 Strategic Plan to a new Strategic Plan. Third, we have furthered our commitment to our future and that of our community with a major property acquisition. When the next history of the University is written, this past year, I believe, will be seen as pivotal for the future.

The Shoulder to Shoulder campaign, spearheaded by alumnus Hugh Devlin, '64, originally had a goal of raising $25 million for a new science and technology center and for increasing our endowment for student scholarships. Last year, mostly because of projected increases in construction costs, we increased the goal to $28 million. I am pleased to report that Shoulder to Shoulder has raised $28.2 million. A list of the generous contributors to this effort appears on page 8.

What is particularly impressive about this success is that this major gift initiative supplemented, not substituted for, La Salle's annual fundraising. In fact, since 2001, thanks to many of you, the University has raised more than $84 million.

As for the University's strategic planning process, I want you to know that we have evaluated our actions related to the 2001 Strategic Plan and decided to refine our priorities going forward in 2007 and beyond. A University-wide Planning Advisory Board has been charged with the task, and progress is already apparent.

Besides the Shoulder to Shoulder initiative and our strategic planning developments, our primary preoccupation this past year has been the expansion of our campus through the purchase of the Germantown Hospital property and two adjacent properties, increasing the University's footprint from 100 acres to approximately 130 acres. The addition will provide much-needed space for our growing School of Nursing and Health Sciences, which includes our programs in nutrition and speech-language-hearing science.

None of this progress would be possible without the counsel and vision of our Board of Trustees. The Board's decisions in recent years reflect confidence in the University's ability not only to carry out our educational mission but also to increase our positive impact on our community.

In closing, I invite you to read the report that follows, which reviews selective accomplishments of our 2001 Strategic Plan, reflects on the major achievements of the past year, and provides a preview of our strategic priorities for the immediate future.

I remain grateful for your support and ask for your sustained partnership as La Salle moves forward with its mission of shaping our community by Catholic and Lasallian values: a deep respect for each individual, a belief that intellectual and spiritual development go hand in hand, a passion for creative teaching and learning, and a conviction that education should be useful—for personal growth, professional advancement, and service to others.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Michael

Achievements of 2001 Strategic Plan

As we transition from the Strategic Plan that has been in effect since 2001 to a new Strategic Plan, it is appropriate to highlight some selected achievements under each of the five themes.

Enhancing our Intellectual and Spiritual Life

In the 2004–05 academic year, La Salle took a major step in enhancing opportunities for adult learners by establishing our first college, the College of Professional and Continuing Studies. The College is designed primarily for part-time students whose family and/or career responsibilities do not allow them to be full-time students. La Salle has a long history of meeting the needs of adult students, going back to educating World War II veterans in our Evening Division. The new College built on that history by first launching accelerated programs in both Liberal Studies and Business Administration and subsequently introducing professional certificate programs in areas such as Fraud and Forensic Accounting, Negotiation and Conflict Resolution, and Intelligence and Security Studies.

Student learning opportunities have been greatly enhanced over the last several years, particularly by placing more emphasis on research and on international travel/study. These ways of learning are very much in the Lasallian tradition of a hands-on, practical education.

Students are engaged in in-depth research projects with faculty from nearly every discipline in the schools of Arts and Sciences, Business, and Nursing and Health Sciences. Together, these research teams have studied issues in nutrition, art, literature, finance, and psychology, among many other subjects, and have published and presented reports on their findings on campus and beyond. An increasing number of students are taking advantage of study abroad programs with our partner schools in Ireland, Italy, Mexico, and Australia, as well as through travel/study courses in Denmark, China, Spain, Germany, Sweden, Norway, France, Italy, England, Greece, Ireland, Austria, Hungary, Chile, Switzerland, Guatemala, El Salvador, the Czech Republic, and the Holy Land.

The University continues to cultivate Catholic and Lasallian values in our curriculum, programs, and institutional culture. A striking example in recent years can be found in the participation of La Salle faculty and administrators in the Lasallian Leadership Institute, a three-year national leadership program of the Christian Brothers. Already, 15 individuals have completed the program, and another five are currently involved. Most importantly, the participants engage in activities that bring the program's values to life on campus.

Communicating Our Distinct Identity

In order to communicate our distinct identity, the University first commissioned a comprehensive marketing research study in 2002 to learn how those most familiar with La Salle—faculty, staff, students, and alumni—described that identity. After analyzing the data from individual interviews, focus groups, online surveys of current students, and telephone surveys of alumni, the report concluded that La Salle's emphasis on values and ethics is a major factor in the University's distinctiveness, as is the Christian Brothers' approach to education as passed down from the founder, St. John Baptist de La Salle. The report also formulated six key descriptive messages about La Salle that derived from the research. Subsequently, the University's Marketing Task Force condensed the messages into a Positioning Statement that stands as a succinct portrayal of what we are and what we aspire to be.

Based on the findings of the marketing research, a new graphic identity was developed and launched in 2004.

The logo retains the traditional La Salle colors of blue and gold and features a fracted chevron, used in the coats of arms of De La Salle families in 17th-century France. The University's coat of arms was modified by simplifying the plumed helmet and emphasizing the cross, star, and chevron. The new athletics logo, featuring the image of La Salle's mascot, the 17th-century French explorer, has proven to be very popular with athletes and students. We introduced a new tagline, "Never stop exploring," and produced a Brand Book, which covers graphic identity guidelines, the significance of consistency of our key messages, and, most importantly, the need to have the campus community live up to how we describe ourselves in our Positioning Statement.

POSITIONING STATEMENT

La Salle University is a dynamic educational community shaped by traditional Catholic and Lasallian values: a deep respect for each individual, a belief that intellectual and spiritual development go hand in hand, a passion for creative teaching and learning, and a conviction that education should be useful—for personal growth, professional advancement, and service to others.

The University's environment fosters students' involvement in their own education, both inside and outside the classroom; supports and challenges them; engages and empowers them, all with the goal of providing a transforming experience, one that will ensure their lifelong association with La Salle.

Further, we have enhanced the ways in which we communicate by developing a dynamic University Web site and portal and by redesigning La Salle Magazine and expanding its Advisory Board. The magazine's planned three-year, nine-part series on St. La Salle's mission and its relevance today—part of our distinct identity—has completed its first year to widespread acclaim.

Investing in Our Future

The 2001 Strategic Plan recognized the necessity for the University to make the personal, communal, and financial investments needed for La Salle's future success and to attract the external support needed for these investments. It was important to manage the University's resources wisely in order to present a sound fiscal position to secure investments for new construction, facility improvements, and acquisitions. It was equally important to build an enhanced fundraising program. Over the last several years, we have managed to do both.

The work of the University Advancement office resulted in our raising $28.2 million for our Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future major gift initiative for the construction of a new science and technology center and increasing our endowment. When donations to the Annual Fund, other gifts, and grants are added, the University has raised more than $84 million over the past seven years.

Our strong financial position allowed us to build St. Basil Court, our $26 million student residence, and Treetops Café, its adjacent dining facility, in 2005. The following year, we built a 22,000-square-foot addition to La Salle's Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa. The expansion and renovation project added 13 new classrooms, a new computer lab, two nursing labs, and a science lab, among other features. Both projects were funded by the successful issuance and sale of bonds. Also in 2006, the University secured funding through a grant from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for the installation of synthetic turf for McCarthy Stadium and Hank DeVincent Field, as well as lights for the stadium.

In recent years, improvements in facilities and advancements in technology have been a University priority. In athletics, enhancements have been made to the fitness center, Tom Gola Arena, and locker rooms. The creation of a portal within the University's Web site has dramatically expanded internal communication for students, faculty, administrators, and alumni. More classrooms have become "smart" classrooms, upgraded with state-of-the-art technology. Wireless Internet access has expanded significantly, and video conferencing between the Main Campus and La Salle's Bucks County Center has become a reality.

Enhancing the Quality of Life in Our Community

One initiative, both real and symbolic, that has enhanced the quality of life in our community was the successful campaign to make 20th Street from Belfield Avenue to Olney Avenue a one-way street. Accomplished by a vote of the Philadelphia City Council, the change converted a dangerous stretch of road running through the heart of campus into a safe and attractive corridor. Further, additional lighting on and around the campus have complemented other safety measures.

Over the past several years, La Salle has taken steps to positively impact our neighborhood and wider community. The University's Board of Trustees has fully supported the planning of a neighborhood investment strategy. Working closely with the public sector, local elected leaders, and civic associations, La Salle's goal is to make our area a better place. One demonstration of this commitment was the creation of a new position at the University—Director of Community and Economic Development.

The most significant action in this direction has been the planning of a supermarket and shopping center on La Salle's Good Shepherd property. With the encouragement of and in consultation with elected leaders—Pennsylvania State Reps. Dwight Evans, '75, and John Myers, State Sen. LeAnna Washington, and Philadelphia City Councilwoman Donna Reed Miller—and others, La Salle has partnered with Moreland Development and Fresh Grocer to plan a 50,000-square-foot Fresh Grocer supermarket and 22,500 square feet of complementary retail space. The developers estimate that about 300 jobs will be created, and community residents will have priority for those jobs. Groundbreaking on this project is anticipated in the fall of 2007.

While a dramatic development like the shopping center warrants attention, not to be forgotten is La Salle's historical, mission-driven, and widespread commitment to community service—which happens year in and year out.

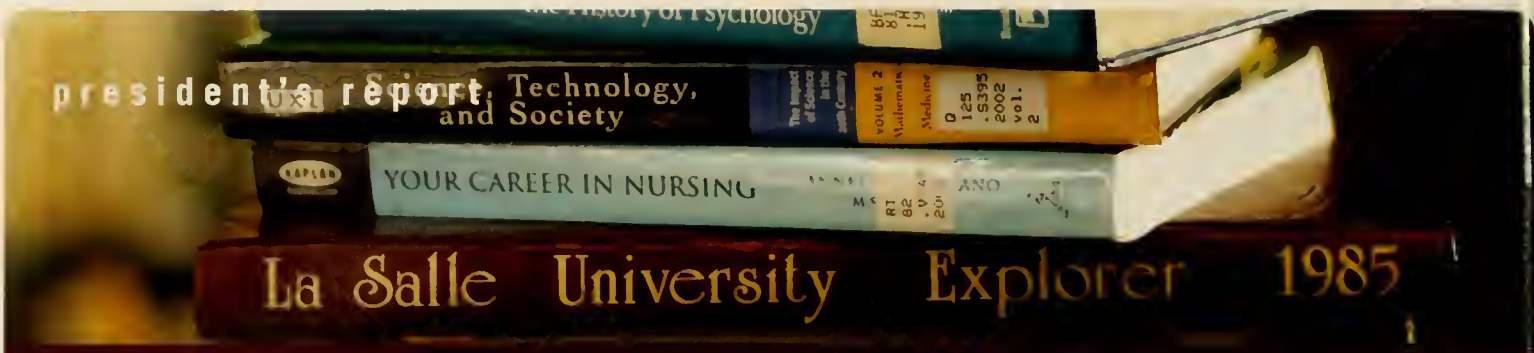
Partnering with Our Alumni

The importance of alumni to the success of a University cannot be overstated, and the 2001 Strategic Plan included as one of its five major themes: Establish mutually beneficial partnerships with alumni/ae. Over the last several years, the steps taken to engage alumni with the University and with each other have been remarkable.

Working in close coordination with the Alumni Relations office, the Alumni Association established a new governance structure for its Board of Directors, which included a new election process that has expanded participation significantly. Under the effective leadership of its board, the Alumni Association developed its first-ever Strategic Plan, and that plan has been synchronized with the University's strategic direction.

Not only has the Alumni Association increased its financial investments in alumni/ae and student programming, but it has also increased its sense of ownership for the University's fundraising priorities. At the same time, La Salle's alumni commitment extends well beyond financial support. Through a variety of programs, alumni have acquired a greater understanding of the Lasallian charism and their role in the perpetuation of the Christian Brothers' mission. In the last few years, in partnership with the Office of Admission, the La Salle Alumni Admissions Network has involved more and more interested alumni in the student recruitment process, some participating in letter-writing campaigns, others representing La Salle at college fairs around the country.

The growth in alumni participation over the last several years is noteworthy. This includes increases in volunteers, attendance at events, and the addition of clubs and chapters both near and far. The Alumni Relations office's special focus on career networking in the last few years has resulted in more University support to alumni and more alumni support to each other and to students.



This progress is primarily attributable to the quality of leadership on the Alumni Association Board of Directors and is aided by enhanced opportunities for communicating with alumni. In addition to the quarterly La Salle Magazine, the quarterly Alumni News, and the Alumni Web site, alumni are now able to access the University's mylasalle Web portal for more insider information and access to special benefits and to subscribe to a monthly e-newsletter.

2006–07 Highlights

Shoulder to Shoulder Success

The Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future major gift initiative culminated in the spring of 2007, raising $28.2 million, $16 million for the science and technology center and $12.2 million to boost the University's endowment. More than 70 percent of gifts to Shoulder to Shoulder came from individual donors.

Donors to Shoulder to Shoulder found inspiration not only in the University's vision for the future, but also in the words of alumni, who shared their reflections on the theme of "Why I Give Back" in the pages of La Salle Magazine. In an effort to get others excited about and involved in developments on campus, they related stories of how stimulating academic programs, financial assistance, and the support of the campus community carried them through their college days, and of how the Lasallian mission continues to shape their lives.

Campus Expansion and Development

In May 2007, La Salle acquired the 24-acre Germantown Hospital property from Albert Einstein Healthcare Network, an area that will now be known as the University's "West Campus." As a result of this $10 million transaction, La Salle has gained much-needed space to enhance students' educational experience, and Einstein has retained the ability to provide clinical services to the Germantown community on the hospital site. To make this possible, La Salle inherited some independent leases with physicians, and Einstein retained ownership of two buildings and has entered into long-term leases with La Salle for some spaces.

Over the summer, the University took the first steps toward establishing a presence on its newly acquired property by relocating the La Salle Nonprofit Center and University Advancement, including the offices of Alumni Relations, Development, Government and Community Relations, University Communications, and University Events, from Main Campus to West Campus.

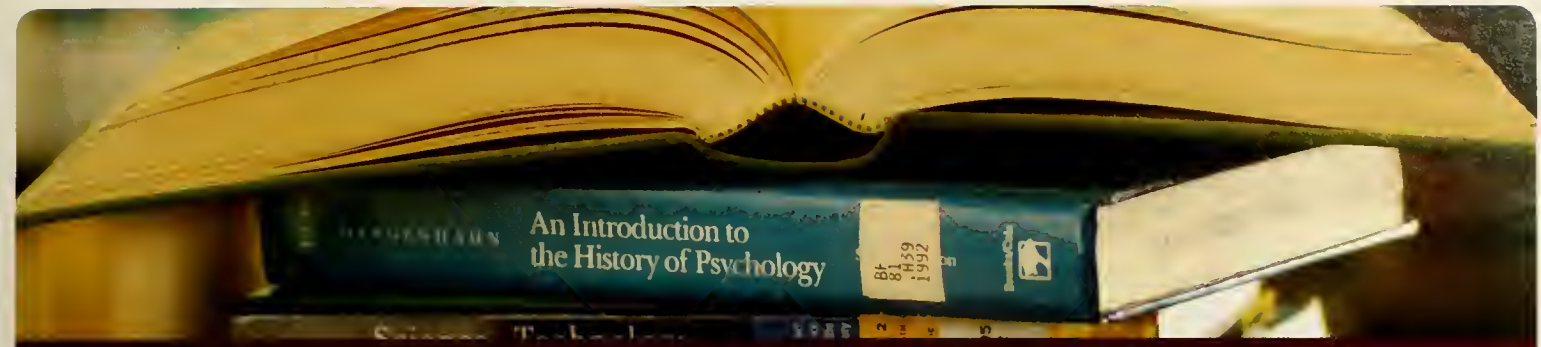
The School of Nursing and Health Sciences is scheduled to relocate to West Campus in January 2008, in time for the spring semester.

In addition to the Germantown Hospital site, the University has acquired two additional properties. A 4.5-acre parcel, formerly the site of the Manna Bible Institute, and an approximately 2-acre tract, on which a Presbyterian church now stands, are now part of West Campus.

Back on Main Campus, plans are moving forward for a renovated and expanded science and technology center.

Over the summer, offices formerly located in Benilde Hall, including Alumni Relations, University Communications, University Ministry and Service, and the College of Professional and Continuing Studies, were relocated and the building was demolished. Work crews also completed a lighted and landscaped pedestrian walkway linking Main Campus to West Campus over the summer. Several residence halls received upgrades over the summer as well, including fresh paint, landscaping, additional lighting, and other repairs. New signage, consistent with the University's graphic identity, has been installed to ease navigation around the expanded campus.

La Salle has been awarded a $200,000 grant from the William Penn Foundation to facilitate dialogue and greater cooperation between the University and our neighbors as we look forward together to community and economic development opportunities. The 201st District Advisory Council, led by Pennsylvania State Rep. John Myers and composed of local community leaders, will work in collaboration with La Salle officials to plan for the future.



New Strategic Plan: A Preview

The Planning Advisory Board (PAB), charged with designing and implementing a new Strategic Plan, has identified seven Strategic Priorities: (1) Mission Integration, (2) Enrollment Management, (3) Student Success/Experience, (4) Learning Environment, (5) Neighborhood Investment, (6) Human Resources, and (7) Resource Acquisition and Development.

Some of these priorities, such as Neighborhood Investment and Resource Acquisition and Development, clearly have threads of continuity from the 2001 Strategic Plan. Others have emerged from intense and comprehensive discussions about what La Salle should look like in the future and how to get the University there. Many exciting ideas and plans have been put on the table, such as a proposal to organize the freshman year of study as a more discrete academic unit. In addition, the PAB has already initiated plans that emphasize La Salle's tradition of learning by combining theory and practice, that encourage the greater use of the resources of the Philadelphia area, and that promote learning for the common good. I invite you to stay in touch and to stay tuned, as the best is yet to come.

Devlin, McNamee to Receive Alumni Association's Highest Honors

Hugh Devlin, '64

Rev. John P. McNamee

La Salle's Alumni Association will honor two individuals in November for their service to La Salle University and to the community. Hugh Devlin, '64, will receive the John J. Finley, '24, Award, while the Rev. John P. McNamee will receive the Signum Fidei Medal.

The John J. Finley, '24, Award, named for a former Alumni Association president who was known to many as "Mr. La Salle," is bestowed upon a La Salle alumnus or alumna who has demonstrated outstanding leadership in service to the University.

Devlin, Chair of La Salle's Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future major gift initiative, was singled out for the Finley Award for his significant contributions to La Salle as a dedicated alumnus, civic leader, and philanthropist.

An accomplished professional and family man, Devlin lives in Fair Haven, N.J., with his wife, Nancy, and is now retired. During his career, he was a co-founder of Barr, Beatty, Devlin, an investment banking firm, and served as Managing Director of Morgan Stanley.

After years of generous contributions to La Salle and its students, Devlin vowed to increase giving to the University among its alumni. His vision led to Shoulder to Shoulder, an initiative to fund a new science and technology center and strengthen the endowment. Since Shoulder to Shoulder's inception, Devlin has personally pledged $4 million, and his leadership helped the University exceed its goal of $25 million—raising more than $28 million in gifts and pledges.

"Hugh Devlin stepped up at an opportune time for La Salle, offering to help the University take its fundraising efforts to another level," said Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, President. "He not only ignited the Shoulder to Shoulder initiative with a generous gift, but he also subsequently challenged others to support this important major gift program. His devotion to his alma mater and his leadership in service to La Salle make him truly deserving of the Finley Award."

The Signum Fidei Medal has been given since 1942 to individuals or groups for their contributions to humanitarian principles and to upholding the mission and goals of La Salle University and the Christian Brothers. Signum Fidei, meaning "sign of faith," is the motto of the Christian Brothers.

McNamee, who has led St. Malachy School and Parish for more than 35 years, has been described as an extraordinary priest. A tireless advocate for his inner-city neighborhood and its residents, McNamee hands out food to the poor each evening, intercedes with colleges on behalf of promising students, and lends a hand to neighborhood kids in trouble.

McNamee was responsible for bringing Dorothy Day's Catholic Worker Movement to Philadelphia and was instrumental in the development and reorganization of the Ludlow Youth Community Center. He is also a co-founder and board member of the Southwest Community Enrichment Center, a nonprofit that serves 400 adults, children, and senior citizens each week in the Kingsessing section of Philadelphia.

"Father McNamee remains a hero to all those he has helped over the past 30-plus years in North Philadelphia," said Jim Ahern, '70, President of the Alumni Association. "When so many people and institutions abandoned his parishioners, he stood by them. St. Malachy and Father McNamee have been resources and sources of aid for the displaced and underserved. He is a fitting candidate to receive the Signum Fidei Medal."

In 1994, McNamee recounted his struggles and joys as a Philadelphia priest in the book Diary of a City Priest. It received a Catholic Press Association Bood Award and was adapted as a movie in 2001 starring David Morse. Among his other writings, McNamee recently published Donegal Suite, a book of poems and observances inspired by the Irish countryside.

Last year, the Signum Fidei Medal honored St. Vincent de Paul Church in Germantown for its programs that minister to the needy. Other past recipients include R. Sargent Shriver, Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, the Rev. Leon H. Sullivan, the Hon. Genevieve Blatt, Sister Mary Scullion, R.S.M., and Kenneth Gamble.

Commencement

La Salle Awards Honorary Degree to President of The Associated Press

BY AMY GARDNER CRANSTON

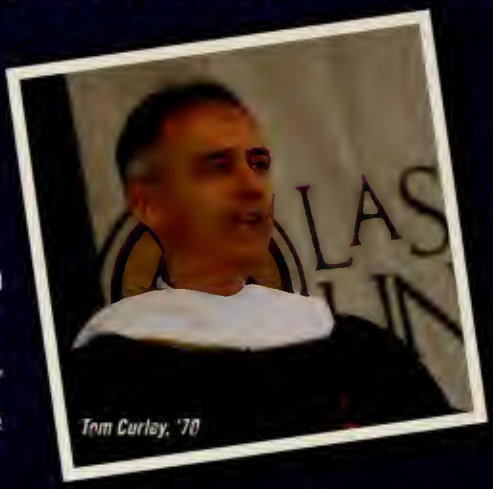
La Salle University awarded an honorary doctoral degree to Tom Curley, '70, President and CEO of The Associated Press (AP), during Commencement on May 13.

"It's very, very special to me. I feel very strongly about the work La Salle and Brother Michael McGinniss have done," Curley said of the honor. "It feels very special to me to come back 40 years later."

As President and CEO of the AP since 2003, Curley has led the organization from a wire service to an interactive global news network. "We intend for The Associated Press to be the first words people say when they think of news," Curley said.

Under his leadership, the AP became the first western news agency to open a bureau in Pyongyang, North Korea. It also added staff in Latin America, Asia, and the Middle East—including more than 100 staff members in Iraq.

University President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, said of Curley, "Since graduating, Tom has accomplished so much in his career and still managed to remain involved with La Salle in many ways. He has been a major supporter of the University, including service on the Board of Trustees, and of the Communication Department, in particular."



Tom Curley, '70

Curley began his career in journalism at age 15, covering high school basketball for his hometown newspaper, Easton Express, now The Express Times (Pa.). While enrolled at La Salle, he was editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, The Collegian. Curley fondly recalled his time at La Salle during the late 1960s "in a time of upheaval in the world—civil rights, the Vietnam War—the Christian Brothers never shut down conversations. ... They were very adamant about allowing students to speak their minds. They showed leadership and courage when other schools may not have encouraged students to speak up."

Those values greatly influenced Curley, who supports a more open government and citizens' rights to access public information.

Under Curley's direction, the AP played a critical role in establishing a coalition of news organizations and journalism-related groups that promote an accessible, accountable, and open government. The Sunshine in Government Initiative combats what is seen as increased government secrecy since the 2001 terrorist attacks. For his efforts, Curley was inducted into the National Freedom of Information Act Hall of Fame and presented with the National Press Club's John Aubuchon Freedom of the Press Award in 2006.

Prior to joining the AP, Curley was President and CEO of USA Today, the nation's largest-selling daily newspaper. He was the original news staffer who worked on the project that led to the creation of USA Today. He has reported from Europe, Central America, and Asia.

Curley served on the University's Board of Trustees from 1992 to 2005. Last year, Brother Gerard Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58, professor of communication, and Lynne Texter, Ph.D., Chair of the Communication Department, took communication students to visit The Associated Press offices in New York. "He is such a classy, kind gentleman," said Texter. "He really took the time to talk with the students and answer their questions."

Patti Rager Zuzelo Honored with Lindback Award

BY AMY GARDNER CRANSTON

Known as a "fervent scholar and avid researcher" by colleagues and students, La Salle Nursing Professor Patti Rager Zuzelo, Ed.D., was awestruck when informed that she was the recipient of the 2007 Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching.

"Every year I go to Commencement, someone I really admire wins the award," Zuzelo said. "So for me, it's such an honor to be recognized among our amazing faculty."

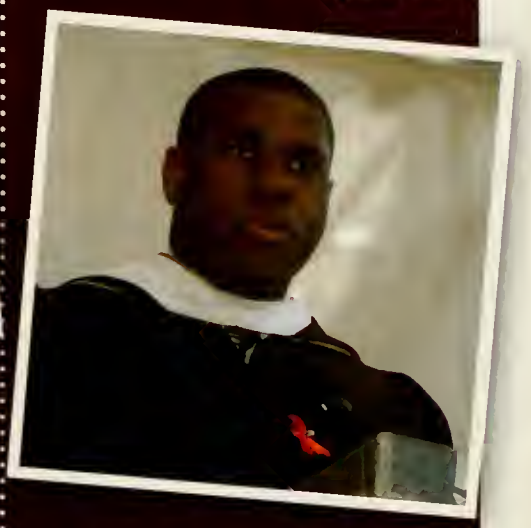
Zuzelo came to La Salle in 1997 and became a full professor in 2007. In addition to teaching undergraduate and graduate nursing courses, she serves in a joint-faculty position at Albert Einstein Medical Center as Associate Director of Nursing for Research.

The Lindback Award follows Zuzelo's recent honor as the top nurse researcher in Pennsylvania, for which she received the The Nightingale Foundation Nursing Research Award. Zuzelo also published The Clinical Nurse Specialist Handbook, which addresses the specific, practical, day-to-day responsibilities and challenges of a clinical nurse specialist.

Zuzelo, of Warminster, Pa., earned her doctorate of education from Widener University. She received her master's degree in nursing from the University of Pennsylvania and earned a certificate in business administration from Penn's Wharton School. She received her bachelor's degree in nursing from Pennsylvania State University.

Brother Gerry Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58, Director of International Programs for the Communication Department, congratulates Aspasia Varsami as he presents her with a diploma during graduation at the Athens Gold Club. Ten students graduated this summer with a master's degree in Professional Communication and Public Relations as part of the La Salle University program in Athens, Greece. The current class has 20 students from Greece, Jordan, Ukraine, Albania, and the United States.

Ricardo Johnson Delivers Commencement Speech

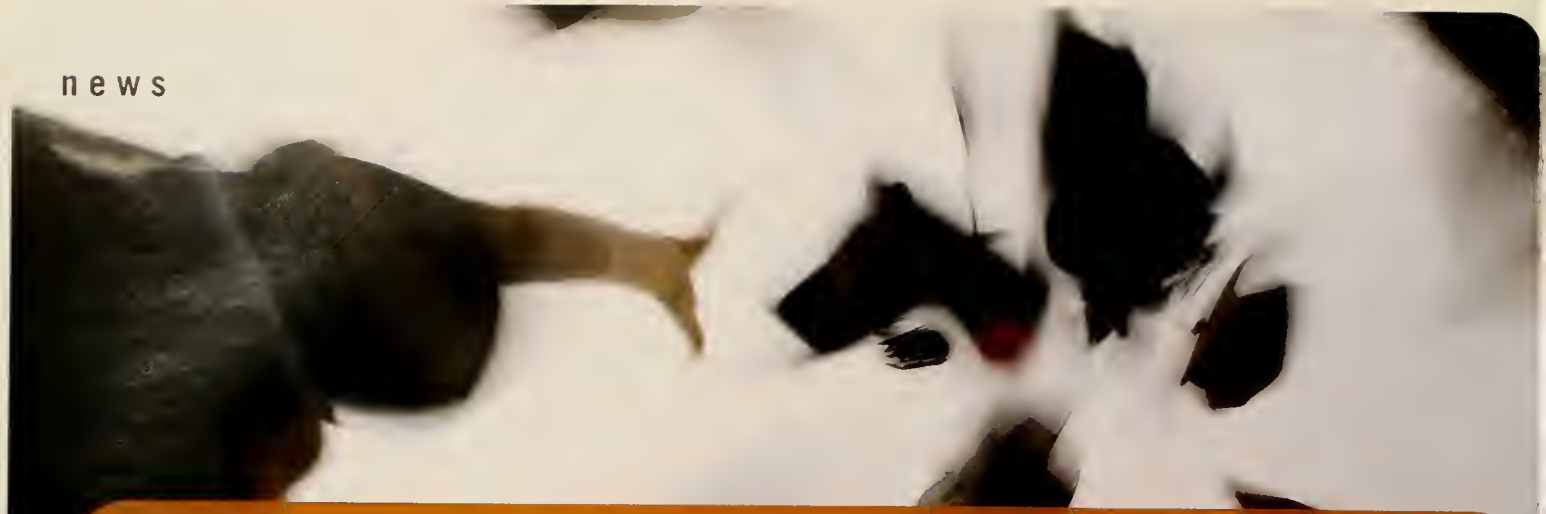


As the senior chosen to deliver this year's Commencement speech, Ricardo Johnson urged fellow classmates to reflect on how others will know they are graduates of La Salle University.

"I think it's important that after you spend four years here, you remember what was special here, and how we can bring La Salle into our everyday lives," Johnson said.

Johnson, a political science major, addressed about 1,000 graduates, their families, and friends during the 2007 Commencement Ceremony. He emphasized the values of La Salle and how they shaped his character as a student. Johnson served as President of La Salle's Students Government Association and the College Republicans, and he also was on the executive board of the African American Student League. He told fellow graduates that La Salle taught him to be a good student and a good person.

"In our time here, we learned that the right choice is not always the easy one. We've learned the path to doing what is right is hard," Johnson said. "They will know that we've come from La Salle by the choices we make."



Graduation Spans Family Generations

BY AMY GARDNER CRANSTON

It took 38 years for Vietnam War veteran Jim Stanger of Holland, Pa., to complete his bachelor's degree in English at La Salle University. More extraordinary than the accomplishment itself was the opportunity to graduate with his granddaughter Angie this spring.

"I always felt guilty for not finishing my degree," Stanger said. "It was something I always wanted."

When Stanger realized his granddaughter was prepared to earn her bachelor's degree in nursing, he thought graduating with Angie would be something special that the two could share. Angie said she was proud that he could finally finish his degree.

Every Monday this past spring, Stanger attended his final course and met Angie for dinner. "She would buy me dinner on her meal plan, but we both knew I was paying for that meal plan!" he said.

"It was great to have that time with my grandfather," Angie added.

Stanger first enrolled at La Salle in 1969 with assistance through the G.I. Bill. A Philadelphia native, he said attending La Salle was a no-brainer. "It seemed like everyone who went to Catholic high schools wanted to go to La Salle," Stanger said. "La Salle was considered a leader in academic excellence."

He worked on his degree until 1974, when money from the G.I. Bill ran out. "The G.I. Bill covered only the first 100 credits," he explained. Plus, with a wife and two daughters, Stanger was too busy to complete his final courses.

Angie Stanger and her grandfather, Jim, are all smiles after completing their bachelor's degrees together this spring.

In 1991, Stanger returned to La Salle to complete his last 20 credits. At that time, he and his wife, Jo Ann, were helping their daughter Melissa raise her daughter Angie. "Jo Ann and I have raised Angie since she was born; she's been with us the majority of her life," Stanger said.

Upon his return, Stanger got involved with The Masque, the University's theater group. While attending practices and performances, he would bring then-6-year-old Angie. "She loved it. Even then, she enjoyed coming to La Salle's campus," Stanger said. "I believe the time she spent here as a child influenced her to attend La Salle."

Stanger was forced to set aside his education again when his father passed away in 1993. This time, he was only four credits shy of his degree.

Ten years later, he and Jo Ann were back at La Salle, moving Angie onto campus as a freshman. They were so impressed with the presence of La Salle's Parents' Association during the move that they started volunteering—going to meetings, helping at freshman orientation, and assisting with La Salle's Phonathon fundraiser. For their dedication, Jim and Jo Ann Stanger were asked to serve as the association's Chaircouple, which they did for three years.

Last fall, seeing that his granddaughter was almost finished with her bachelor's degree, Stanger thought about his own education. He returned once again to complete his remaining four credits.

With his degree, Stanger plans to become a certified public accountant and open an accounting business with Jo Ann. Angie will begin work as a psychiatric nurse with Albert Einstein Health Network.
